BEADLE DIME # 4 ALICE WYLDE MRS METTA VICTOR = 1860 =

4 40/10 This is an Beadle In I saw 1860

1860 Alice Wylde Caftemand Daughter Mrs. Meta Victor. Beadle and Co Mew fork.

ALICE WILDE:

9 4 3 8 0-

RAFTSMAN'S DAUGHTER.

FOREST ROMANCE.

THE REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE

BY MRS. METTA V. VICTOR

BEADLE AND COM ANY,
NEW YORK: 118 WILLIAM STREET
LO. DEN: 48 PATERNOSTER ROW.

ALLIEUE WILLIA

DN Month

RETERRETERE

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1860, by IRWIN P. BEADLE & CO., In the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York

361 -12150 076 1 3150 171

ALICE WILDE.

the department of the ways the day of CHAPTER I.

THE CABIN HOME.

"That ar' log bobs 'round like the old sea-sarpint," muttered Ben Perkins to himself, leaning forward with his polehook and trying to fish it, without getting himself too deep in the water. "Blast the thing! I can't tackle it no how;" and -he waded in deeper, climbed on to a floating log, and endeavored again to catch the one which so provokingly evaded him.

Ben was a "hand" employed in David Wilde's saw-mill, a few rods farther up the creek, a young fellow not without claims to admiration as a fine specimen of his kind and calling. His old felt-hat shadowed hair as black as an Indian's, and made the swarthy hue of his face still darker; his cheeks and lips were red, and his eyes blacker than his hair. The striped wammus bound at the waist by a leather belt, and the linen trowsers rolled up to the knees, were picturesque in their way and not unbecoming the lithe, powerful figure.

Ben had bobbed for saw-logs a great many times in his life, and was a person too quick and dextrous to meet with frequent accidents; but upon this day, whether the sudden sight of a tiny skiff turning the bend of the river just below and heading up the creek threw him off his guard, or what it was, certain it is, that stretching forward after that treacherous log, he lost his balance and fell into the water. He did not care for the ducking; but he cared for the eyes which saw him receive it; his ears tingled and his cheeks burned as he heard the silvery laugh which greeted his misfortune. Climbing up on to a log again, he stood dripping like a merman and blushing like a peony, as the occupant of the boat rowed nearer.

"Keep out the way them logs, Miss Alice, or ye'll get upsot!" he cried, glad of an excuse for attracting attention from his own mishap.

"I can take care of myself, thank you," was the gay answer. "Do you see father's boat coming, anywhere in sight, Ben? He was to be home this afternoon; and I took a fancy to go down and meet him."

"I don't see nuthin' of it. That war a mighty big raft he took down to Centre City; the biggest raft that ever floated on that river, I reckon. He mought not be home for two or three days yet, Miss Alice. Gorry! but won't he hev a heap of money when he sells that ar' raft!"

"And he'll be sure to bring me something pretty-he always does."

"He knows what's what," responded Ben, stealing a sideong, admiring glance at the sweet, young face in the skiff.

If a compliment was intended, it was not understood by the hearer.

"Yes, father always knows just what suits me best. Dear father! I hope he will come home to-night. I've been out picking blackberries for supper—just look at my hands," and she held up two pretty, dimpled hands, as if to show how charming they were, instead of to betray the purple-tipped fingers.

But Alice Wilde did not know they were pretty, in sober truth, for she had never been praised, flattered, nor placed in a situation where she could institute comparisons.

"Well, Ben, good-by. I shall float down the river a few miles, and if I don't see him, I can row back alone."

"You're mighty pert with the oars, for a gal. I never seed no woman 't could row a boat like you, Miss Alice."

"Thank you," she said, with a bright smile, as she turned her little birchen skiff about and struck out into the river again.

Ben watched that graceful form until it was out of sight, heaving a sigh, as he turned again to his work, which told how absorbed he had been.

Drifting down the river, under the shadow of precipitous bluffs, while the sunshine flecked with gold the rolling prairie-land upon the opposite side, the young girl sang wild negro-melodies which she had learned of the two old colored people who formed her father's retinue of house-servants. Rich and clear, her voice floated through those beautiful solitudes, heard only by the envious birds in the trees which overtopped the bluffs.

Presently she had listeners, of whom she was unaware. An abrupt bend in the river hid from her the little boat with its single sail, fluttering like a butterfly against the current. It held two persons—David Wilde, the owner and captain of the raft of which Ben had spoken, a rough, striking-looking man of middle age, attired in a pink calico shirt and brown linen jacket and trowsers, who sat at the tiller smoking his pipe; and a young man of four and twenty, extremely good-looking and fashionably-dressed.

"What's that?" exclaimed the latter, as the sweet voice thrilled over the water.

"That's herself, sure," replied the raftsman, listening 'she's comin' to meet me, I reckon. It's just like her."

"An I who's 'herself?'" queried the other, laughing.

"My cub, sir. Won't yer take yer flute out of yer pocket an I give her a tune, before she sees us? It'll set her to wonderin' what 'n earth it is."

The young man put the pieces of his flute together, and joined in the strain, rising loud and exultant upon the breeze; the voice ceased; he stopped playing; the voice began, and again he accompanied it; it sang more exuberently than ever, and the flute blent in with it accordantly.

It was not until they were nearly upon her fairy bark that they came in sight of the singer, her bright hair flying, her cheeks red her than roses with the double exercise of rowing and singing. Philip Moore thought he had never beheld so lovely an apparition.

"Oh, father, I'm so glad you're home again. Did you hear that beautiful ceho?" she asked, her eyes all aglow with surprise and pleasure. "I never heard any thing like it before. It must be the rocks."

"Twant the rocks—'twas this here gentleman," said David Wille, smilling. "Mr. Moore, this is my daughter Alice."

Unknown to himself, his tone and look were full of pride as he presented her to his companion, who never paid a more sincere tribute of a limitation to any woman, however accomplished, than he did to the artless child who returned his deep bow with so divine a blush.

"I thought I'd come to meet you, and run a race home with you," she said to her fither, with a fond look.

"That's just like my little cub-allers on hand. Wall, go ahead! the breeze is fair, and I guess we'll beat ye. Hope ye'll make good time, far I'm beginning to get rather growly in the region of the stomach."

"Pallas expects you," returne l'Alice, laurhing.

"If your skiff were large enough for two, I'd take those cars off your hands," said the young gentleman.

"Nobody ever touches this, but myself," and away sped the fairy affair with its mistress, during ahead like an arrow, but presently dropping behind as they tacked, and then shorting past them again, the young girl stealing shy glances, as she passed, at the stranger who was watching her with mingled curiosity and admiration. So sweetly beshful, yet so arch and piquant—so rustic, yet so naturally graceful—so young, he could not tell whether she estremed here if a child or a woman—certainly she was very different from the death of tow-headed children he had taken it for granted must run wild about the 'cabin' to which he was now about to make a visit.

"How many children have you, Mr. Wille!"

"She's all. That's my mill you see just up the muth of the creek that. We're nigh on to my calin now; when we've rounded that pint we shall heave in sight. Some to me I smell supper. A cold snack is very good for a day or two, but give me suthin' of Palles' getting up after it. That's the cabin!"

Philip had been following with his eyes the pretty sall of who had already moored her craft to the flot of a hupe olm, overhanging the gravelly shore from a sloping bank above, and now stood in the shadow of the tree awaiting them.

If it had not been for the blue smoke curling up in thin wreaths from a stick chimney which rose up in the rear, he would hardly have discovered the dwelling at first sight—a little one-story log-house, so completely covered with clambering vines that it looked like a green mound. That sink resuckles waved at the very symmetric the chimny, and will roses curtained every win low.

Taking upon herself the part of locker, All clin way to the house. Philip was again acrecably surprised, as he entered it. He had read of squatter life, and considered himself "posted" as to what to expect—corn-bread and bacon, an absence of forks and table-cloths, musquitoes, the river for a wash-basin, sand for soap, the sun for a towel, and the privilege of sharing the common bed. But upon entering the cabin, he found himself in a large room, with two smaller spartments partitioned from the side; the cooking seemed to be done in a shanty in the rear. The table was set in the center of the room, with a neat cloth, and a great glass plate, heaped with blackberries, stood upon it, and was surrounded by a wreath of wild-flowers woven by the same dimpled hands which had managed the oars so defly.

"'Clar to gracious, masser, you tuk us unbeknown."

The new speaker was an old negro woman, portly and beaming, who appeared at the back door, crowned with a yellow turban, and bearing in her left hand that scepter of her realm, the rolling-pin.

"But not unprepared, hey, Pallas?"

"Wall, I dunno, masser. I dish't spec' the pickaninny 'ud est more 'n one rass' chicken. But that's two in de oven; for, to tell de trute, masser, I had a sense dat you war a comin'; and I know'd if you wasn't, me and my de man wouldn't be afraid of two fowls."

"But I've brought home company, Pallas."

"Her you now, masser? I'se mighty glad to hear it. I'd as soon wait on masser's frien's as to sing de Land of Canaan. Yer welcome," she alled, dropping a courtesy to the guest with as much importance as if she were mistress of the house—as, in fact, she had been, in most matters, for many long years. He made her a deep and gracious bow, accompanied by a smile which took her old heart by storm.

Retreating to the kitchen outside, where Saturn, her husband, had been pressed into service, and sat with an agron over his kness pareing potatees, buoyed up by the promise of reast chicken from his wife, she told him as she rolled and cut cut her biscuits:

"The finest gentlem she had set eyes on sence she left ole Virginny. His smile was enough to melt buttah—jus' de smile what a sweet mannered young gentlem ought to have. She was mighty glad," she added, in a mysterious whisper, "dat ar pickaninny was no older.

"Wha' for?" queried Saturn, pausing, with a petato on the parring the expanding whites of his eyes.

"You nebbah could see tru a grin'-stone till I'd made a hole in it for yer. It's a wonder I tuk up wid such an ole feel as you is, Saturn. If yer eyes were wurf half as much as dan pertaters' eyes, yer could see for yerself. Hasn't masser swore agin dem city gentleum?"

"He's swore—dat's so."

away his precious child—nebbah!" continue! Pallas, lifting her rolling-pin threatingly at the bare thought. "If he war rich as gold, and lubbed her to distruction, 'twouldn't make a speck o' difference. He's jealous of the very ground she walks on; and he hates dem smoof-spoken city folks."

"Do you suspec' he's a killnapper—dat ar' visit ?" a kell Saturn, his eyes growing still birger, and looking toward the door as if he thought of the possibility of the han being young etranger carrying him off.

"You is born a fool, and you can't help it. Put 'em 'taters in de pot, and mind yer own hisness. I want a mere wood for dis fiah—immejetly!"

When Pallas said "immejetly!" with that majestic air, there was nothing left for her werser half save to chy, and he retreated to the wood-pile with alacrity. On going out he run against Ben Perkins, who had been standing by the epon door, unperceived, for the last five minutes.

"Why, Ben, dat you?" asked Pallas, good-naturelly, not dreaming that he had overheard her conflicated conversation.

any orders for the mill to-night. I see him when he passed the creek. Who's with him, Palls?"

The old celeral woman cuve a salden sharp giance at the youth's troubled face.

"It's a frien' for all I know. What how is it of yours to be askin'?"

"I sip to I had it no busine. Do per tainit it is a large into anybody as expected to marry Miss All off his relies treated in and to be taken to be toots as he said it is quarient.

"Marry Miss Alice! What a simpl'un you is, Ben. Wha's that pickaninny but a chile yet, I'se like to know? a little chit as don't know nothin' 'bout marryin' nobody. 'Sides that, long as her fielder libs, she'll never marry, not if it war a king. He'd be mad as fary ef any one was to dur' to speak of such a thing. Humf! my pickaninny, indeed!" with an air of seem and indignation deeply felt by the youth, whose face was flushing beneath the implied rebuke. "If you'll stop a few minutes, I'll give yer some of dese soda biscuits," she said, after a brief silence, secretly pitying a trouble at which she had shrewly guessed, though she resented the audaeity of the hope from which it sprang. "Dat ar' man-cook what gets up the vittles for the mill-hands can't make sech biscuits as mine. Step now, and hab some, won't yer?"

"Thank ye, Pallas, I ain't hungry," was the inclancholy reply—melancholy when proceeding from a hearty, hardworking young man, who ought to have been hungry at that hour of the day. He turned away, and without even going to the cabin-door to inquire of Mr. Wille as he had proposed, struck into the pine-woods back of the gard n-patch.

CHAPTER II

PALLAS AND SATURN.

Supper was over, and Davil Wilde was cutting with his jack-knife the strings of several packers which had accompanied him on his trip back from Center City, where he had disposed of his raft. His great set upon a woolkn settle, as much interested as the others in the proceeding, though his eyes were fixed mostly upon the happy girl, who, with all of her sex's love of finery, was upon her knees on the floor, assisting, with smiling eyes and easer floor as at the phosent task of bringing forth the contents of these package. A clark-blue dress of the finest merino, a rich shawl, and some apply laces for collars and ruilles rewarded her search. There was another package which was all her own, with which she was equally delighted; it was made up of a dozen of he has whose titles she easerly read before she continued her explorations.

"Here's a dress Mr. Moore picked out for you," said the raftsman, muliciously, unfolding a gengers red and pall or calico.

"But I hadn't seen you, you know," r turred Philip coloring.

At this moment Pallas, who had an eye up n the bundles, came in on a pretence of clearing off the table.

"Come and bok at my beautiful promise Piller" crie!

her young mistress.

"You'ver t little he'n an angelf rafeller, my lerchie," garahet I that personer, cut him sight of the caller from the correct her ope while whalther the merits.

All or I died up into the rea hemelouset for of her failer with a smile; the idea of his being an an of hear in the hall to restablishment their met.

tinued David, think to help produce with a resident and a limite from his jucket/pocket. "So it it first and he placed it made the little fair hand.

"It sets to your far r him to the to the real" in the Pallas. "Thar's none like masser to tell per-cisely what a person wants and is a wishin' fer," and again her covert glance sought the calico.

"Sartainly, old girl; no doubt," chuckled the raftsman "If that's the case, jist take them handkerchiefs and that dress-pattern and give 'em to Saturn. You can keep the vest and the tobacker and the boots yerself, and especially the trowsers-you've allers worn 'em!"

"Laws, masser, of I hadn't, things would a gone to rack and ruin long ago. Dat nigger of mine no use, but to sleep hisself to deaf. He's a great cross to me, Saturn is," and with a profusion of smiles and thanks she carried off her booty to the kitchen, graciously dispensing his share to her "ole man," and condessending to be unusually affeble.

"If we only had a camp-meetin' to go to now," she sail, spreading out the new jacket and trowsers beside the calleo. "It's four year, come nex' monf, since we went to dat meetin' down de riber. I declar' it's jes' like de heathen fer decent culled pussons not to have any place to holler Glory, and show der new clo'es.

"I'd like to go to meetin' will dese boots," remarked her spouse, looking down at the immense pair into which he had squeezed his feet.

"Ef you did, all I can say is, dar' wouldn' be no room for anyboly class dar'," returned Pallas, giving way, by mere force of habit, to her custom of snubbing her companion.

"What fir?" inquired Saturn.

"No matter, of yer don't know. My! my!"-hopelessly-" what a fool you is!"

"Dut's so, with;" was the humble reply, "but," picking up cour to at the sight of his new rig, "mebbe when I get my new july on, I'll know more."

"Yould better put it on quick, den, and nebbar take it off."
When her dishes were washed, Pallas took the calico in her lap and sat down.

"I've a s ase," she said, in a low voice, "dat things is goin' to happen,"

"Wha' fer ?"

"I haven't had such a sense for years," she continued, too preoccupied to a bainister her or tomary rebuke. "And when Tre a sense, it allers comes to suthin'—it never fails. I haven't had such feelin's since missus die l. 'Pears to me dat young gentleum looks like missus' family. And it's de same name—curus, isn't it?"

"Berry," replied Saturn, at random, lost in the study of his feet; "dem boots is beauties."

"I dunno what masser brought him here fir, he's allers been so keerful. He tole me 'twas a pardner in de steum saw-mill dot takes his lumber off his han's; a young storekeeper in Center City now, though he use to be a lawyer in New York -bress it! it's a long time since I sot eves on dut city now. Our fus' masser, Mortimer Moore, usin to invite no si.cpkeepers to his house. My! my! but he was a nighty proud man, and dat's what made all de trouble. Dem was gran! times, will all de serbents and de siller-never toucht I cult come to dis-but I promised missus, when she died, I'd stan' by her chile, and I shall stand by her, long as der's any irei left in dis ole body-bress her! She's growing up j s' as han'some as ever her mulder was, and she's got her ways; and as for manners-hi! hi! folks might haf at the illa of ole Pallas learnin' manners to her missus, but dur ain't nel div knows better how table ought to be set and sarled, and thinks to be done, than my dear chile now, dis minit. Hi mass ? will keep her, like de children of Israel, forty years in de wilderness, she shall be a lady for all dat, bress her, and a Christian lady, too! She knows all de les' part of de realms by heart, now; and she can sing hymns like a cherulian. S. m. times I mos' think she's got one of dem golden burns in her hand. If dat ole fool ain't asleep. Saturn!" highing his shins, "wake up yer, and go to bel-immejetly!"

Saturn had a discouraging time getting his new to 's off in the sleepy state which had come upon him; but this being at last accomplished, and he safely lodged in the bod, which to it up the greater portion of Pallas' "settin'-room," off her hitchen, she stole out to the corner of the himseto "spy out the land," in Bible language, which, to her, shelters I the doe from opprobrium. Pallas was no mischlefanking listener; she considered herself entitled to know all that transpired in the family, whose secrets she kept, and whose welfare she had in her heart.

"My! my! they make a pretty pictur' sittin' dar' in de fight ob de moon," she thought, peeping at the group, now githered outsile of the door, enjoying the glory of a most brilliant August moon. The young stranger was telling some story of foreign adventure, his fine face and animated gestures showing well in the pure light, while the old raftsman smoked his pipe to keep away musquitoes, as he said—though they were not particularly troublesome in that neighborhood—and Alice sat on the step at his feet, her arms folded over his knee, her eager, girlish face lifted to the story-teller.

"He sartainly belongs to our family of Moores, of he ain't no nearer than a forty-second cousin," whispered Pallas to herself. "Masser don't know 'em, root and branch, as well as I do, else he'd see it right away. How that pickaninny is a watchin' of him talk! Laws! nobody knows what their driag in dis yere worl', or we'd all act different,"

As she stood there, taking observations, she thought she saw a person in the shade of the great elm on the bank; and not being afraid of any thing but "gosstesses" and "sperits," she went back to the kitchen for a bucket, as an excuse for gring down to the river and finding out who it was.

"Effit's that yer young Perkins, won't I let him know what a foll he's making of hisself—he, in leed! Gorry! I'll give a sool ling 'at'll his' him his lifetime." But she had no opportunity of venting her indication, as the form, whosever it was slipped down the bank, and ran away along the wet sand, taking shelter bolind a ledge of rock, before she could recognize it.

"My! my! dis ole bucket full of silber," she ejaculated, as she liked it out of the river, glittering in the moonlight. "Dis y is all her looks lubly as de stream of like days now in rund do stress ob Paradise, to-night;" and the good old creature stall watching the barni hed ripples. The rush of waters and the marmur of the pine-forest were sweet even to her ears.

"It's a bal night for young folks to be sittin' out-o-doors," she reduct I, shaking her yellow turb a suggestively, as the looked at the two by the calin-loor.

But let us go buck a list's way with our stery.

CHAPTER III.

REJECTED ADDRESSES.

THROUGH the spacious lengths of a suite of rickly furnished rooms, a woman was wandering, with that air of nervous restlessness which betokens a mind ill at ease. The light, stelling in soft tints through the curtains, fell upon many pictures and objects of taste and art, and all that lavish richness of plenishing to which wealthy Gothamites are prene—but upon nothing so beautiful as the mistress of them all, who now moved from place to place, lifting a costly toy here, parsing before a picture there, but really interested in neither.

" Virginia !"

Her cousin Philip had come in through the library so, silently that she was unaware of his presence until he spoke, although it was waiting for him which had made her so uneasy.

" Well, Philip?"

She had started when he spoke her name, but recovered her heighty self-possession immediately.

"Sit down, please, on this soft. I can not talk to you who a you are standing. You look too all and too inporture. I have come to-day for your answer, Virginia."

They set upon the soft together, he turning so de to real nor face, which was bent down as she played with the dianonal ring upon her finger. She boked cool and quit come is to despen the arbor of her lover; but he was so also in his own feelings that he could not and would not understood in "Speak, Virginia! I can not bear this say not"

Still she hesitated; she liked him to well to take my para-

"I have question I my hourt of a ly, Philip, as you belied me," she began after a few ment atte, "and I have satisfied my, elf that I can never be happy as the wife of a poor man."

Then you do not love me! Love does not put itself in the scales and demand to be balanced with gold."

But gold is very necessary to its welfare and loar life. No, Philip, I do not know that I love you—perhaps I do not—since I am not willing to make this sacrifice. I certainly think better of you than of any other living man, except my father; I would rather marry you than any other man, if you had the wealth necessary to support me in the station for which only I am fitted. A young man, with nothing to rely upon but the profession of the law, in a great city like this, must expect to wait some time before he can pour many honors and much wealth into the lap of the woman he loves."

"You are streastic, Virginia!"

"No, only practical. My father is not so rich as in days gond by. His fortune has dwindled until it is burely sufficient to keep up the house in the old style. If I would still preserve the family pride, still rule queen of the circle I have brought around me, I must marry rich."

"And for this you can resign a love like mine."

"It is my nature, Philip—born in me, cherished in me. My father, I know, would not listen to the match, as highly as he esteems you. I had a sister, a woman when I was a child—yeu remember her, do you not? she married against his will, married poor, and triad this 'love in a cottage' sentiment—he never for ave her, and she never prespect; she is dead, poor thing, and I do not care to emulate her."

"Hungh! I am to understand that your father then rears his children as slaves to be sold to the highest bilder -that you hall yourself really for the market?"

"Den't provoke me, Philip." The black eyes were fivel upon him haughtily.

"Forgive me, Virginia. I am half-mal just now, you have not encouraged me."

Perhaps I have—shown you the affection of a consin. I have fit as if you were one of the family. I might even have felt a still of ar int ret, hal I allowed mys it. But I am, what you are will be—probat. I may yet so some one what you are the larger pot and love, who has also the fortune you had it if not I hall apport some one for glory's sake, and let the love ro! Don't had not a sometime. I have beauty fashion, pride of place, family, every thing but the means wherewith to set these off magnificently; and this has made me ambitious. Dear Philip, much as I like you, I could never be contented to wait your slow promotion."

"Prudence is very commendable, Virginia. Its maxims fall with double force from lips as beautiful as yours. I will try to learn it. I, a man, upon whom such cold duties are supposed most naturally to devolve, will be taught by you, a soft, tender woman, who looks as if made for the letter purpose of loving and teaching love. Farewell! when you see me again, perhaps I shall rival you in prudence."

"You are not going away, cousin Philip?" He was already opening the door into the hall, as she followed him, and caught his hand.

"Oh, yes, I am. Since only rich men can possess the happiness such gentle creatures have it in their power to bestow, I must make huste after wealth," and he looked down bitterly at the proud girl over whose face was coming a faint expression of remorse and relenting.

"Shall I not hear from you?" she asked, quite hundly.

"No; not until I am in a fair way to achieve that which will recommend me to your disinterested offiction."

He withdrew his hand from her clasp, and went cut with a quick, resounding step which told of the firmness of his resolution. The girl who had rejected him sunk down in the nearest seat. She had never seen him bok mere-as a wem in is proud to have a man look—han konne, self-rellent, determined. than in the hour of his disappointment. Two or three tears trickled through her jeweled than re; she shock them off impatiently.

"He is a man who would never have showed a y choice," she whispered. "But I have deid lift the bet. I know my own disposition; I should feet at the chains which limited my power. And I am used to every indulation. I am selfish. Poor Phil! if someloly wently result with a check for half-a-million, I'd merry you to w."

In the mean time Philip Moore, all the draws stirr I up from the bottom of the fount in his walls transported soil hurrich to the office which he had just a top in Whileste the There, as if in answer to the with which had been ar as I, he found a letter from a friend who had emigrated westward three years previously, forsaking the law for speculations in pinelands and lumber, merchandise, etc. He was doing well, was retting rich in seven-league strides, had married a pretty western girl, was happy, had gone to housekeeping, wanted a partner in business as well as domestic affairs—recommended Philip to accept the chance—a few thousand dollars would be all the capital required.

Philip had seven thousand dollars in stocks; he sold out, shook off the dust from his feet as he left the great metropolis, and answered his friend's letter in person, in less than a fortnight.

Virginia Moore missed the convenient escort, the constant attentions, and the profound worship of her high-hearted cousin; but a rich Spaniard, ugly and old, was come into the market, and she was among the bidders. Let us leave Virginia Moore, and return to that western wilderness, where a certain little girl looks lovelier, in her blue-gingham dress and wild-flower wreath, than the other in all the family d'amonda.

CHAPTER IV.

BEN PERKINS.

The day after her father's return, Alice Wille sat down to try her new thimble in running up the skirt of her mering dress. The frock which she wore, and all her others, probably, were fashioned in the style of twenty years and short under the arms; a belt at the waist; low in the nock; full, puffed, short sleeves; narrow skirt, and no criabline. Her profuse hair, when it was not allowed to fall in a gold o torrent around her neck, was looped up in the quaint style which marked the fashion of her dress. She looked like the portrait, come to life, of some republican belle and beauty of long ago. Quite unconscious that this ancient style had been superseded by the balloons of to-day, she measured of the three short breadths which, when hemmel, would have her pretty ankles exposed, even as they now, with the slippered feet, peeped from beneath her gingham.

If Philip Moore had understood the mantua-maker's art, and had possessed "patterns" of the latest moly he would not have instructed his hostess in any changes, she I site is picturesque and quaint as she was. But he did not let her sew very steadily that day. He wanted to explore the surroun lines of the cabin, and she was his really, intilligent guide.

They went back into the forest, through which than hir L er renlanon, the crash of a falling tree; francy ma were been cutting timber for another ratt, on which, at its convicin, Philip was to return to Center City. His bidies were! not have detained him more than three or four days but he was in no haste; he wanted to hunt and the altitle and he liked the novelty of the ilea of thating down the river a s raft of logs in company with a score of reach in the Although David Wille sawed up some of his tim'r him if, his old-fashioned mill was not equal to the samply, and he sent the surplus down to the steam saw-mills, one of which was owned by Philip and his partner.

It called forth all his affability to conquer the shyness of his pretty guide, who at last dared to look full into his face with those brilliant blue eyes, and to tell him where the brooks made the sweetest music, where the fawns came oftenest to drink, where the violets lingered the latest, and where there was a grape-vine swing.

Both of them looked very happy when they came in, just in time to meet Mr. Wilde at the supper-table, who had been at the mill all day. He did not seem in such good spirits. Some new thought troubled him. His keen, gray eyes scanned the countenance of his child, as if searching for something Litherto un liscoverel; and then turned suspiciously to the S'ranger, to mark if he, too, held the same truth. For the first time it occurred to him, that his "cub," his pet, was no long r a little girl-that he might have done something fatally foolish in bringing that fine city aristocrat to his cabin. Hall he not always hated and despised these dandified caricatures of men?-lespised their vanity, falsehood, and affectation?hatel their vices, their kid-gloves, their perfumed han-likerchiefs, and their fishionable nonsense? Yet, pleased with one of them, and on a mere matter of business, he had, withcent the wis lom of a fool, much less of a father, brought one of that very class to his hour. How angry he was with himself his compressed lip alone revealed, as he sharply eyed his 5: -. Yet the laws of hospitality were too sacred with him to allow of his showing any ruleness to his guest, as a means of getting rid of him.

Unions loss of the bitter jealousy in her father's heart, All to will as a synas a humming-lied. She had never been highly with children, and youth delights in youth. Alice had been in runt of this said toward, until she had passed pleasant works with such it ruthed. For, although she had passed pleasant works with such young men as changed to be employed by her father, they had never seem alto her like companions, and she naturally adopted the reserve which her father also used with them. His cabin was his caste. No one came there familiarly, except upon invitation. The "hunds" were all fed and lodged in a house by themselves, near the mil. The gloom of the host gradually affected the vivacity of the others; and the whole household retired early to rest.

The next day, Philip set off to the mill with Mr. Wilte, carrying on his smoulder the excellent ritle of the latter, as he proposed, after business was over, to make a starch for deer. now nearly driven away from that locality by the sound of the ax in those solitudes once so deep and silent.

"Tell Aunt Pallas I'll bring her a haunch of venion for supper," he said gayly to the young girl, touching his straw hat with a grace that quite confused her.

She looked after them wistfully as they went away. She felt lonely; her sewing fatigued her; the sun was too hat to go out on the water; she didn't know what to do. Even her new books failed for once to keep her interested many hours. When Pallas looked for her to help pick over berries to dry, she was not to be found. She had sought that delimits. refuge of early youth-the garret; which in this instant was but a loft over the main story, reached by a liller, and s !dom resorted to by any one, except when the radismon stre! away a bear-skin, a winter's store of nuts, or something of the kind. To-day Alice felt powerfully attracted toward a certain trunk which had stood in that garret ever since she could remember. It was always locked; she had never son it open; and did not know its contents. Now, fir a wender, the kiv was in the lock; she never thought of there being any thing wrong in the act, as she had never heard the trunk mention !, on t had never been forbid len access to it, and liking the lit, sin sat down beside it and began an examination of its myst ri a Lifting up a napkin spread over the top, she was met by a lovely face, looking up at her from the ivery up a which it was so exquisitely painted. The breath die lupen har line

"It must be my mother's; how very beautiful she was-my mother!"

Hot tears rushed up into her eyes at this life-life visi u of a being she did not remember, of whom chi Palles of it spoke, but whom her father seldom mentional-never, save in the most intimate moments of their association. She was sorry she had opened the trink, redizing at once that if her father had desired her to have of the ministre he would nave shown it to her years ago; she had a glimpse of a white-silk dress, some yellow lace, a pair of white-silk slippers, and long white-kid gloves, but she would not gratify the intense curiosity and interest which she felt. She remembered hearing her father descend from the garret late in the preceding wight; and she guessed now the purpose of his visit.

An impulse was given to her thoughts which drove away her r stless mood; she retreated from the loft, and set very will the work helping Pallas with the blackberries. She was sitting in the kitchen-door, an apron on, and a huge bowl in her lap, when Philip Moore came through the pines, dragging after him a young deer which he had slain. Pallas was on a bench outside the shanty, and it was at her feet the hunter laid his trophy.

"Bress you, masser Moore, I'se mighty glad you went a huntin'. Miss Alice she laugh and say de deer needn't be atraid of you, 'cause you was a city gentleum, but I tel' her she di lu't know nutlin' about it. I was afeard you'd get tired of white-fish and salmon, and bacon and fowls,—dis ven'sen jes' de meat I want."

"Well, Aunt Pallas, I shall claim one of your best pies as my reward," said the amateur hunter, laughing. "But little All where mustn't think no one can do any thing right except foresters and lumbermen."

"Oh, I don't!" exclaimed she, blushing. "I think you do every thing beautifully, Mr. Moore, that you've been brought up to do, you know—but shooting deer—they don't do that in cities, do they?"

"Not exactly in cities; but there are wild woods near enough New York yet for young men to have a chance at chaing that accomplishment. I suppose you wouldn't trust the you out sailing, to-morrow, would you?"

If she would, yer couldn't do it, for I want the boat my-

Mr. Moore looked up in surprise at the speaker, who had just come up from the river, and whose looks and tones were still ruder than his words.

"Hi, Ben! yer as surly as a bar," spoke up Pallas; "yer laven't a grain of perliteres in yer lody," one added, in a fower tone.

"I leaves perliteness to them as is wimmen enough to want it," answered Ben, throwing back a glunce of defiance and contempt at the innocent stranger, as he stepp I into the shanty. "I want them new saws as came home with the capt'n."

"There's somebody that looks upon me in the same light you do," hughed Philip, when the youth had secured the saws and departed.

"Oh, Mr. Moore, you don't know how I like upon you!" she exclaimed, earnestly; neither did he, any more than he knew how the fate of that black-cycl, heavy-lapwel mill-hand was to be mixed and minch I with his own.

He almired Alice Wilde as he would have done any other pretty and singular young creature; but he never thought of loving her; she was a child in his eyes, ignorest and uncaltivated in many things, though always graceful and refined; a child, who would be out of place in any other sphere except that peculiar one in which she now moved. He did not guess that in her eyes he was a hero, almost supermoral faultless, glorious—such as an imaginative girl who had seen nothing of the world, but who had read many premis and much fiction, would naturally create out of the first material thrown in her way.

No! all through that happy firthight of his whit he talled with her freely, answering her early quality about the world from which she was so sold bit, rained the was with her, sailed the river, played his that, said that the lavesongs, and all without reflection up a the leader simple in he was making. Reen ever were up a him, and saw a thing to justify consure; he would have burned at the blacef that little wild girl falling in love with him, if he had the chief it at all; but he did not think of it; s metines he is it with her, as if they were both children; and sometimes he hadir took upon himself the pleasant test of technic har in many as about which she showed an interest. He was to the little beauty and innovace; and was extranely garried in her pres nee not to let a hint of evil be breathed up a that your soul-her father, Pallas, all who appraid I har sound notunally to pay her parity the same deference.

The raft for which Philip was waiting was now in version ness, and was to commence its drifting journey upon the new day. Alle had fled away into the pine-woods, after dinner, to anticipate, with dread, her coming lonelines; for her father was also to accompany it, and would be absent nearly three weeks. Her footsteps wandered to a favorite spot, where the grape-vine swing had held her in its arms, many and many a frolic hour. She sat down in it, swinging herself slowly to and fro. Presently a footfall startled her from her a struction, and, looking up, she saw Ben Perkins coming almost the path with a case in his hand, of home manufacture, a maining a gorgeous forest bird which he had captured.

"I reckon I medn't go no further, Miss Alice," he said;
"I war a bringin' this bird to sac it you'd be so agreeable as to take it. I cotched it, ye terday, in the wood,"

"Oh, B n, how pretty it is!" she cried, quickly bru hing away her tears, that he might not guess what she had been crying about.

"It sines like any thing. It's a powerful fine sine r, Miss Alige-I thought melter't would be some comfort to ye, seein' yer about to be that thus that's been turnin' yer head so."

"What do you mean?—you speak so roughly, Ben."

"I know I ain't particularly smooth-spoken; but I mean what I say, which is more in some folks do. Some folks thinks it good sport to be telling you fine file, I've no doubt."

"Wily do you will to speak ill of those of whom you have Lor to, Ben? It in't generous"

"But I have ranh — O Alice, you don't know how much!" he set the birleage down, and came clear to her "I've got sathin' to say that I can't keep back no haren. Won't you set down 'si le of me on this log?"

"I'd rather stan!, Ben," she said, drawing back as he was about to take her hand.

The quivering smile upon his lip when he asked the question changed to a book which half frightened her, at her gesture of refusal.

"You dish't object to settle' by that town chap; you sot here a this very beg with him, for I seen you. Cuss him, and his fire of the I say!"

"I can not listen to you, Bon, if you use such language; I wit how we have the market results you to day," and shot and to go home.

"I'll tell you what's the matter, Alice Wille," and he cought her hand almost flereely. "I can't he p still any longer and see that feller hunrin' 'round. I didn't mean to speak this long time yet, but that stranger's driven me crazy. Do you 'spose I kin keep quiet and see him smirking and howin' and blowin' on that blasted flute, around gu; and you lookin' at him as if yer couldn't take yer cy's cif? I) you s'pose I kin keep quiet and see him makin; a simpleon of the purtiest girl that ever growd? You not lait wine.—it's true; jist as soon as he'd not away from here he'd forget all about you, or only think of you to hugh at your howist ways with some proud lady as the as hims hi"

"()h, I am afraid it's too true!" burst firth Alice, involuntarily.

best, he'd take yer away from yer own old father as I was the ground you tread, and try and make a hely of yet, and never let you speak to your own thesh and the stagin. While I—I wouldn't do nuthin' but what yer father wanted; I'd settle down side of him, work for him, see to things, and take the care off his mind when he got old. Yer father hates them proud peacocks, Alice—he hates 'em, and so do I! I know he'd ruther have me. Say yes, do now, that's a real girl."

"I don't understand you, Ben," said All a callly, trying to pars, for she was troubled and want d to a taway.

"I'll tell you then," he said, "I want you to there me, Alice. I've been thinking about it there two yours-hight and day,"

"Why, Ben," cried the startled child, "In ver thought of it—never! and I can not now. Father will be very angry with you. Let go of my hand; I want to go he me."

"You ain't a little girl any langer, Alles Willie, and I mess yer father 'il find it out. He may, he mad for a spill; but he'il get over it; and when he comes to think of the chances of his dyin' and leavin' yer alone, he'il give his constant. Come, Alice, say yes, do, now?"

The intense cacerness of his manner made har translated as manner made har translated, in an asympathy, but she looked into his blazing open firmly, as she replied, "Never! so long as I live, never! And you must have speak of it again, unless you want to be discharged in me."

27

Don't you threaten me, Miss Alice. I ain't the stuff to be threatened. If I'd have said what I've said this day, three weeks ago, you wouldn't have been so mighty cool. Not that I think I'm good enough for ye—there ain't the man 'ivin' that's that; but I'm as good as some as thinks themselves better—and I won't be bluffed off by any broadcloth coat. I've loved you ever since you were a little girl, and fell in the limb-pond onet, and I fished ye out. I've loved ye more years than he's seen ye weeks, and I won't be bluffed off. Jes' so sire as I live, that man shall never marry you, Alice Wilde."

"He never thought of it; and it hurts me, Ben, to have You speak of it. Let me go now, this instant."

She pulled her hand out of his, and hurried away, forgetful of the bird he had given her.

Love, race, and despair were in the glance he cast after her; but when, a few moments later, as he made his way buck toward the mill, he passed Philip Moore, who gave him a Phasant, careless nod, hate—the dangerous hate of envy, jadousy, and ignorance, darkened his swarthy brow.

Poor Alice, nervous almost to sobbing, pursued her home-ward way. She had never thought of marriage except as a Paralise in some for, Areadian land of dreams which she had feshioned from books and the instincts of her young heart; and now to have the idea thrust upon her by this rude, determined fellow, who doubtless considered himself her equal, shocked her as a bird is shocked and hurt by the ritle's clamor. And if this young man thought himself a fit husband for her, perhaps others thought the same—perhaps her father would wish her to accept him, some time in the for fature—perhaps Philip—ah, Philip! how almost glorified he looked to her vision as at that moment he came out of the for st-sholows into the path, his straw-hat in his hand, and two wind tosing his brown hair.

"Here is the little humming-bird, at last! was it kind of Lor to fly away by here if on this last afternoon of my stay?"

Her ray his view, how he aming his smile, while als was so will so that it and grow saller still. Sometical to reply as rayly, but her lip trembled.

"Wint's the matter with the little Wil le-rese?" he maked, kindly looking down into the suffused eyes.

"I've been thinking how very lonely I shall be. My father is going away, too, you know, and I shall have no one but good old Pallas."

"And that handsome young man I just saw parting from you," he said, mischievously, looking to see her blush and smile.

"Oh, Mr. Moore, is it possible you think I could care he him?" she asked, with a sudden air of we manly pride which vanished in a deep blush the next instant.

"Well, I don't know; you are too good for him," he answered, frankly, as if the idea had just courred to him.

An expression of pain swept over Alker's f. ...

"I know, Mr. Moore, how you must rested ma; and I can not blame you for it. I know that I am i market—a field, ignorant child,—that my dress is odd, my manner awkward,—that the world, if it should see me, would hard at mo—that my mind is uncultivated,—but ch, Mr. M—re, you do not know how caser I am to learn—how hard I should study! I wish my father would send me away to sho h."

"That would just spoil your sweet, pouller charms, lab Alice."

He smooth I her hair soothingly, as he well have the a child's; but something in her tent had put a new the wint in his mind; he looked at her carnestly as she bish i health this first slight cares which he had ever given here "Con it be so?" he asked himself; and in his eyes the y margial dunly took more womanly printing. "He wary-law exquisitely beautiful she is now, with the soul giorning thr. inth her face. Shall I ever a min see a wenun stell as this-juras an infant, loving, devoted, unsulfiel, and so be untital? Another face, haughty, charcut, with bralls of perime! black hair, arose before his mental vii n, and told plant heside this sweet, troubled countenant. One so unu. vil, so determined, even in the moment of signs bitt r pd -this other so confiding, so shy, so tall of every right. Philip was touched-air to saying semiling which he might afterward regret; but he was a Morr, and he had his pride and his projudices, studborn as eld Mertimer Morris, mearly. These hardened his heart arainst the sentiment he saw trembling through that clapatit continues

"You are but a little girl yet, and will have plenty of chance to grow wise," he continued playfully. "This pretty Wilde-rose 'needs not the foreign aid of ornament.' When I come again, I hope to find her just as she is now—unless she should have become the bride of that stalwart forester."

"Then you are coming again?" she asked, ignoring the cruel kindness of the latter part of his speech, and thinking only of that dim future possibility of again seeing and hearing him, again being in his presence, no matter how indifferent he might be to her.

For Alice Wilde, adoring him as no man ever deserved to be adored, still, in her forest simplicity, called not her passion love, nor cherished it from any hope of its being recir rocated. No; she herself considered herself unworthy of the thought of one so much more accomplished, so much wiser than herself. Her's was and now that there was a chance in the future for her to burn ner white wings still more cruelly, she grew a shale happier.

"The desire of the moth for the star, Of the night for the morrow;"

"I have business with your father which will bring me nere again, perhaps this fall, in October, certainly, in the spring. What shall I bring you when I come again, Alice? You've been a kind hostess, and I owe you many happy hours. I should like to make you some triding return."

She looked up in his face sadly, thinking she should like to ask him to remember her, but she dared not trust herself.

"If you will select some books—such as you think I ought to study, my father will buy them for me."

"Don't you love jewelry and such pretty tritles as other girls seek after?"

"I really don't know; I've no doubt I could cultivate such a liking," she replied, with some of her native archness.

"I wouldn't try very hard-you're better without," he said, pressing a light kiss on her forehead; and the two went slow-ly home, walking more silently than was their wont.

Pallas saw them, as they came up through the garden, and gave them a scrutinizing look which did not seem to be satisfactory.

"Dat chile's troubles jes' began," she murmured to herself, "If dese yer ole arms could hide her away from every sorrow, Pallas would be happy. But day can't. Things happen as sure as the worl'; and girls will be girls—it's in em; jes' as sartin as it's in eggs to be chickens, and accrus to be cake. Hil hif"

CHAPTER V.

AN APPALLING VISITOR.

One bright September day, after David Wilde had been gone about a week with his raft, a wood-cutter came to the cabin with bad news. He informed Alice that the woods Were on fire two or three miles back, and that the wind was driving the fire in a broad belt of a mile wide directly toward the house; that if the wind did not subside with the setting of the sun, nothing could preserve the place from destruction by the mid-lie of the next day. Alice had been sitting at the window, thinking how delicious that soft, dry wind was; but now she prayed with all her heart that it might speedily die. It was yet many hours to sunset; and she, with Pallas, went into the forest until they could see the fire, and were in some denger from the drifting sparks. The foresters shook their homels and told her to be prepared for the worst; Pallas ground and prayed as if she had been at a camp-meeting; but Alice, although she trembled before the mighty power of the conflugration, endeavored not to lose her presence of mind.

"I shall hope for the best," she said to the men, "but shall be prepared for the worst. Go to the mill and bring round by the river all the skids you can muster—there are two or three, are there not? They will be ready by evening, and if the wind does not chance, or se down, by that time, we will try and save the familiare by means of the boats. Come, Pallas, let us go home and pack up the smaller things"

"Home!" The word sounded sweet, when destruction howered so near; but Alice had a brave heart; she would think of nothing now but of being equal to the emergency, her columness had a solutary effect upon the characteristic excitability of her soble attendant, who followed her back in quite a composed and serviceable mood.

Moving quirtly about, putting her precious books into packages, and getting into movable shape all those little articles of household use which become so dear from association, a looker-on would hardly have guessed how anxiously the young girl waited for sunset—how carnestly she wished that her father had been at home.

"My! my! dat nigger of mine is a wusser feel 'an ever," said Pallas, as she bustled about like an embodied sterm; "jes' see him, Miss Alice; he's went and put on his bes' clo'es, and dar' he stands, nebber doin' a single ting, but jes' hadding dem' new boots of his."

"What are you dressed up for, Saturn," called Alice, haughing, in spite of her anxiety, to find that he had made provision for that which was dearest to him—his new suit would be saved if he was, and if he perished, it would share his fate.

"Oh, missus," he replied, looking facilish, "it's the curiest way to carry 'em."

"B tter pert your boots on, also; then you'll have your nands to work with," surgested Alice.

"Jes' so, missus; I never tought of dut;" and on went the boots, after which Saturn was ready to get as much in the way as possible.

At sunset, the boats, consisting of two little skills which would hold but small freightage, and one larger but which would accomposate the heavier pieces of farniture, were more ed under the stately old elm which had so long stolds antinel over that forest home. Three or four men, among whom were Bon Perkins, held themselves in realings to give the reasserv assistance.

The sun went down in a clear sky; there were noted in is to threaten a wished-for rain; but that cold, firm wind which sometimes blows unceasingly through the days at a time, in the autumn months, rose higher and higher. There was no mean, and as twilight deepened into night, the thick small which hung above the earth rendered the darkness into no; and occasionally when heavy volumes of smake drapped lance toward the earth, the atmosphere was suffecting.

Pallas prepared supper for all, with a strong composite effect to keep off drowsiness; and no one retired to be deleted night the fire traveled within sight; the root of the conflagration swelled and deepened until it was like the aroused the wind, until it rushed in fury directly toward the colin. Light this has of theme would run from tree-top to tree-top, while further back was a solid cone of thre—trunks from which all the foliage and lesser branches had fallen, stratching their glowing arms across the darkness, towering up against the starless background. Frequently these flery columns would crumble, with crashes scarcely heard through the continuous roor, sending up a stiful shower of sparks to be whirled on high by the rushing currents of air.

Fascinated by the beautiful, appalling some, Alice sat on the bank of the river, wrapped in a showl, from which her Tale, excited face shone like a star, kindling the enthusiasm of the rule men about her to do something in her service. As for Ben, we scarcely looked at the fire—his eyes were up a the girl.

"It's no use," he said to her, about two o'clock in the marning, "waitin' any longer. That fire will be on this very spot by track of day. The winds a blowin' a perfect gale. Ain't you cold, Miss Alice?"

"No, no-not at all. If you think it the only way, then I tas begin. My father's desk, with his papers, stands in his broom. See to that first, Ben, and then the other things."

It did not take long for the active follows entaged to clar the cabin of all its contents; every thing was put into the last-and then, as Den said, "it was high time to clear out."

The smoke was sufficultian, and sparks and small branches of burning trees were be sinning to full around. Seturn and Publis were safely stowed in the largest book, while Alice I allow out into the stream in her own tiny cance. The track of the are was a mile in width; but the mill was not the stend by it, nor much troubled by the smoke, the wind carrying it in another direction. The house then occupied by the mill-hands must be the present shelter of the captain's family.

Down the river, in the full glare of the conflagration, floated the little convey. The smoke was not so dense about them new; it hong high above, and rolled in dark billows for beyond. The stream was crimson with the reflection, and the faces of the party looked pulled in the lurid glare—aiways excepting those two sable faces, turned, with awe and dread, toward that sublime picture of devastation.

Suddenly Alice, who was in a lyance, dropped back.

"I must return to the house," she crick, as she came along side of the boat containing Ben and the old servants.

"No, you mus'n't," shouted Ben; "it's too late. It's getting mighty warm here now; and them flyin' branches 'Il hit ye."

"I can't help it," replied Alice, firmly. "There's something in the garret I must have. Father would never forgive us forgetting that trunk, Pallas."

"Law, suz! dat trunk! sure enough," ground Pallet

"I must get it," said the young girl.

"How can you, chile? it's locked, so yer can't get ent the things, and of course you couldn't carry it down. Come back to oh, come back, dear chile, won't yer? What's faty trunks to yer own precious life, chile? and them sparks 'll set your dress on fire, and the heat 'll smother yer all up."

"I've got a hatchet, and I'll break it of a," shouted Allie, now fast rowing back toward the cable.

"That girl's right down crazy," said B in Perhins; "In re Saturn, take these oars, and make 'emily. I'm g in all r h r."

He threw off his jacket and boots, planted into the stream, swam ashore, and run along the bank, keeping place with the skith. Both reached the house at the sing last into they were gone perhaps three minutes, and came forth a ring. Ben carrying the trunk upon his should reform the instant they placed to look upon the wall of fire behind them; but the house instant they placed tolerable.

"These falling bits will surtainly set your clothing which said Ben, hurrying the young sirl away, who would him have lingered yet around the home which had at which had at only with her growth—already the gard now small that and the vines she had planted were droughly but the ir is public; ruin.

"My dress is woolen," slore it; "but I will no. Oh, Do.

this is terrible, is it not?"

"Yes, Miss Allee, but if ye get away sale now, you may thank yer stars. I don't believe the containing in the liquid and the trunk both," he remarked, as he do not his precises (to Alice) burden in the bettern of it.

"Yes it will-but you, Ben?"

Oh, I ain't of as much consequence as a trunk," he replied, bitterly. "Take car' of yourself—don't mind me."

"I shan't stir from this spot until you come with me, Ben.

So get into the boat, quick."

"Get in yourself, Miss Alice, and make good time. You'll be bake I like a brick, if yer don't get out of this soon. I'm going to swim 'long side. What's a mile or two, swimmin' down stream?" He threw himself in the water, and struck out, as he spoke.

She kept beside of him, refusing to go faster than he, that she might give him aid, in case he became exhaustel; the river at this spot was over a mile in width, and it would have been difficult for him, tired and heated as he already was, to make the opposite shore.

As they made their way along in this manner, the wind sweet the hot breath of the fire around them in sufficating ways. The cold surface of the river kept the air comparatively pure for two or three feet above it, or they would have smothered; but as it was, Alice gasped for breath convulsively at times.

"Alice! Alice! you are sufferin'—you can't stand it," cried her chap mion in a voice which betrayed the agony of his soul-it thrill-I through her, it was so sharp with pain.

Don't be uneasy, Ben, we're nearly clear of the fire, now;" but strungle as bravely as she might, she could endure the land no longer, and she, too, leaped into the river, and sheltering land if beneath the shadow of the skiff, swam boldly on, holding a small rope in her hand which secured it from floating off.

As soon as the advance party had got out of the smoke and hat, they waited the return of the two, who made their all armore in an alarming condition. Alice having become exhaust lin the water, and Ben having her in one arm, and swimming with the other, while he towed the skill by a rope held between his teeth.

Alice flinted away when she found herself sife in Pallas' in the rly arms; and Ben might have followed her example had not one of his contains been ready with a flash of spiritally was thought to a to a halicity the same restorative to the young girl, who soon revived, murmuring: "Father will be so glad the trunk is safe, Pallas."

As the morning broke, the party reached the shelter of the mill. It was two or three days before Alice was well enough to visit the ruins of her beloved home; and then she could only row along the river and gaze upon the blackened and smoking mass, for the earth was still too but to be ventured upon. The cabin smollered in a heap; the top of the grut elm was blackened and the foliage gone, but it had not fall not and the grass was crisped and withered to the edge of the river.

The tears streamed down her cheeks as ske gaz 1; but with the hopefulness of youth, she passed on, seeking a new spet to consecrate as a second home. It was vain to think of reallying in the same vicinity, as all its beauty was destr yell, and it would take some years for it to renew itself. She knew that her father did not wish to live too near to his mill, as he had always kept his home aloof from it; that he would be satisfied with such a spot as she likel; and she was and it is to be in the work, for she knew the winter would be up a then before they could complete a new house, if plans were not curly made. There was a lovely spot just beyond the rail is of the fire, where the river made a creata which held in its hollow a grove of beech and clim and a sloping lawn, stin line in a lyance of the dark pines stretching back into the intri r. As her father owned the land for some distance of at the phore she was at liberty to make ber chie, and sin main it here.

Ben Perkins, when not sity denoted it, was the corporate of the place. He had a full sit of to be an interference of the men capable of helping him. There was timber, planty of it, already sawed, for the frame of the new house, and mills a portion went to work upon it, hourds were sawed for the gilling, and shingles turned out of the shingle made in the the "hands" said, Alice made an excellent out-time.

A little sleeping-apartment had been construct if rear of the main cabin, at the mill, and her own belief up in it; but she did not like the publicity of the table and the place, and longed for the new home to be completed.

The emotions of Davil Wille were not enviable when, up a his return, he came in sight of the blackened ruins of his home. He did not so much heed the vast destruction of valuable timber, as he did the waste of that snug little, vine-towered cabin, with the garden, the flowers, and the associations elestering about all. The first question he asked when he chaped his child to his heart, and found her safe, was of all Pall s: "That trunk in the garret—was it saved?"

"Plekaning savel dot ar' trunk, masser. She tought you it I suthin' important in it, and she would go back;" and Alaze felt repaid for all the risk she had run, when she saw the look of relief upon her father's face.

B a Perkins had planned the new house, the frame of which was ready to be raised the day after the captain's return. Whether he had canningly edeulated that the family would some time be increased, or not, certain it is that he made. If rai allowance for such a contingency. He had much that allowance for such a contingency. He had much that talent as an architect, and from some printed plans which had fallen, into his possession, he contrived a very pretty runtic extract, with sharp-pointed gables sanething in the Gathie style, and a porch in front. Allow was charmed with it.

We'll get the house in livin's order in a month or two; but yer can't have all the fixin's over the windows and the house spring; I'll have to make 'em all by hand, through have to, where there ain't much else a-doin'."

B n was ambitious to conciliate Alice, and to make her feel a resultable could be to her and her father. Love promptables head and hands to accomplish wonders. Poor Ben. This head and hands to accomplish wonders. Poor Ben. The she might, gain her expressions of gratitude and a lanific. It is a shout her which held his flery feelings in check. His is a transfer which held his flery feelings in check. His is a transfer, either to check and control its own strong it is, or to give up an object upon which they were set.

A sub-1 gloom came over his olive face, and his eyes in a like small ring fires to meth their black brows. He as her rind phase at remarks to make; no longer brought he y tide of fich, birls, berries, squirrels, venison, or grapes to Aller, no longer tried to brook down her reserve—he just her is 1—worked east analy, page y ringly, mobility.

Alice herself was scarcely more gay. He guessed whose image filled her mind, when she sat so long without moving, looking off at the frost-tinted forests; and the thought was bitterness.

It was necessary for Captain Wille to go again to some settlement down the river, to get Linges, locks, window-scales, glass, etc., for the new house, which was to be ready for these finishing touches, by the time of his return. He did not know, when he set out, whether he would go as far as Center City, or stop at some smaller point nearer home.

One day, about the time of his expected return. Ben had gone for Alice, to get her opinion about some part of the house. They stood together, on the outside, consulting about it, so interested in the detail that they neither of them noticed the boat upon the river, until it was moored to the lank, and the voice of the raftsman was heard calling to them.

Both turned at the same moment and saw that Philip More was in company with Mr. Wilde. Ben's eyes fixed them lives instantly upon Alice's face, which was first pule and them roll. He saw the great throb her heart give, heard the saithin catch in her breath; and he was still be hing at her when Philip sprang gayly up the path and said the hinder the man who loved her better than like saw all the hinder of womanhood coming and going upon her fire at the total of another's hand.

A threatening blackness clouded his brow; All as we in and knew that he read her seret by the light of his own passion; she almost shuddered at the dark board in which he fished upon Philip; but her father was calling to resistance to unload his craft, and Ben went forward with out speaking.

"What a surly fillow that is, for one or and the his rand your "," remarked Phillip, carele sly, haller after him.

"He is not always so surly," All a felt constrained to say "But that's an ill-tempered look for a youthill face. All a I'm afraid he'd hardly make a woman very half you. All of

"That's a matter which does not interest me, Mr. More, I are use you," answered the young girl, with an unexpected flash of pride.

CHAPTER VI.

THE COLD HOUSE-WARMING.

"It's an ill-wind dat blows nobody no good; and dat yar wind dat blowed de fire right down on our cabin did us some good ater all. Masser 'ud libbed in dat log-house till de day Le died, hadn't been for dat fire dat frighted me so, and trade me pray fasser 'n ober I prayed afore. Lord! Miss All e, it looked like de julyment-day, when we sailed down de ribber in de light ob de pine-woods. 'Peared to me de Wirl' was all on fire. I see Saturn a shakin' in his boots. II; tole me, nex' day, he tought it was de day of judgment, sire 'nuit. I heard him askin' de good Lord please forgib illen für all de lasses he'd taken unbeknown. My! my! I tari I myself to pieces when I tought of it arterward, case I'd I ver known where de lasses went to hadn't been for dat Er. Dis new house mighty nice. Ben di in't forget ole nig-Firs when he built dis-de kitchen, and de pantry, and my stin'-room is mighty comfortable. Ben's a handy youn; min-smirt as a basket o' chips. He's good 'nuff for next and he and the last has not and head for my pickaninny, and he Sight to hab sine 'nuif to see it. Ye'd best be kerful, Miss Aller; he's high-tempered, and he'll make trouble. 'Seuse the fir speakin'; I know ye've allers been so discreet and as the lest am any l. None can blame you, let what will harron. But I wish dat Mr. Moore would go way Yes, I do, Miss Alice, for more 'n one reason. Don't tink ch. P.H.s not see tru a grin'-stone. Ef he wants to leab 2my prime o' mind behind him, he'd better clar out soon. Thar! thar, chile, nebber mind ole nizger. My! how party Fri las made de table bolt. I'm much obleaged for yer to-E's ale, dailn'. I'm bound to hab a splendid suppor, de fust in de now house. Taint much of a house-warmin', secia" We'l no by to invite, and no nillie, but we've done what ye could to make things pleasant. Laws! of dat nigger ob mine wasn't sech a fool he could make a fillle, and play suthin' for us, times when we was low-spirite!"

Pallas' tongue did not go any faster than her hands and feet. It was the first day in the new house, and Alice and herself had planned to decorate the principal apartment, and have an extra nice supper. Ever since her father left for the mill, in the middle of the day, after the furniture was moved in, while Pallas put things "to rights," she had woven wre the evergreens, with searlet dogberries and brilliant aut man-haves interspersed, which she had fostooned about the windows and doors; and now she was busy decorating the table, while the old colored woman passed in and out, alling various well-prepared dishes to the feast.

Palles had been a famous cook in her day, and she still made the best of the materials at her command. A large cate, nicely frosted, and surrounded with a wreath, will confide triumphs of her skill. A plentiful supply of property is strawberries and will-plum marmed, by grape jully, and block-berry-jum adorned the board. A venison-ple will be the cover, and a salmon, that would have rous I the cover of Delmonico's, was boiting in the pot, while she prepared a sauce for it, for which, in times mone by, she had received many a compliment.

Philip had been taken into the seret of the flast, as Aller was obliged to depend upon him for a litance in gening our greens. He was now out after a fresh supply, and Aller was beginning to wish he would make more haste, last har father should return before the preparations were complete.

Again and again she went to the door to look out it him; and at let, six o'clock being come and past, six said with a pretty little frown of vexation:

"There's father coming, and Mr. M. reat back!"

The frest waited until sev n-eight-and yet Philip had not returned.

Several of the men who had been hely about the induring the day were invited into support; and at elicit of it they sat down to it, in something of all research again to a for every one by this time had come to the condition to a Philip was lost in the words. Per All a cold to the herself to eat. She tried to smile as she waited upon her guests; but her face grew paler and her eyes larger every m in at. Not that there was any such great cause for fright; there were no wild animals in that vicinity, except an oceasional hungry bear in the spring, who had made his way from some remote forest; but she was a woman, timid and loving. and her fars kept painting terrible pictures of death by Marvatica, flerce wolves, sly panthers, and all the horrors of darkness.

"Pou! poù! chill, doz't bok so scart," sail her father, though he was evidently hurrying his meal, and quite unconscious of the perfection of the salmon-sauce, "there's no cause. He's last; but he can't get so fur in the wrong direction but We'll reaso him out with our horns and lanterns and guns. We'll load our ritles with powder and fire 'em off. He hasn't had time to get fur."

"Likely he'll make his own way back time we're through tiper," remarked one of the men cheerfully, as he helped Lit. If to a second large piece of venison-pic. "Tain't no to be in a hurry. These city folks emit find thar way in the woods quite like us fell rs, though. They ain't up to 't."

Alle booked over at the speaker; and, albeit sie was " tally so hospitable, wished he would make more speed with Mis cating. Pallas waite I upon the table in profound silence. S m thing was up a her mind; but when Alice looked at L.r anti-ply she turn I har eyes away, pretending to be with her duties.

B n Perkins had been aiked to supper, but did not make his my aran is until it was nearly over. When he came in be did not look anyingly straight in the face, but sitting down With a r him, jovid air, different from his usual taciturn tarant, born har hing, talking, and cating, filling his plate with overy thing he could reach.

"Have you seen any thing of Mr. Moore?" was the first Thation put to him, in the hope of hearing from the absent

1.

"Mara? no, -ain't la hara? Thought of course he'd be here makin' himself agreeable to the women;" and he

Wil ther Allie's excited state excited all her perceptions her, this laugh, short, dry, and forced, chilled her blood. He did not look toward her as he spoke, but her are was fix a upon him with a kind of fiscination; she could not turn it away, but sat staring at him, as if in a dream. Only once did he lift his eyes while he sat at the table, and then it was toward her; they slowly lifted as if her own fix'd gaze drew them up; she saw them clearly for an instant, and—such eyes! His soul was in them, although he knew it not—a fallen soul—and the covert look of it through those larid eyes was dreadful.

A strange tremulousness now sized upon Allo. See herried her fither and his men in their preparations, brought the lanterns, the rides, the powder-horns; her hank shaking all the time. They laughed at her for a foelish child; and she said nothing, only to hurry them. But was among the most easer for the search. He had disputy which he is a should strike directly back into the wood; but two or the thought heat to go in another directly n, so as to ever the whole ground. When they had all disputed in the said their lights flishing here and there the such opening should be should be said to Pallace.

"Let us go too. There is an ther hat me Y am at be afraid, will you?"

I don't like trabelling in de weeks at night, but in L ries ober all, and I'll pray fis' and bud if I got short!"

A plantom floated in the durkness of rather years Aleast through that night spent in was larger than the fact depths, but it was shapeless, and she would be a during the fact has give shape to it. All night sums were in h, and the faction men pursued their sorch; and at device it tray returns how really alarmed, to refer hath in extense 1 powers with strong confee and a hastily-propagated by his a fee remember their exertions.

The search became now of a diffrent charter. Carvinced that the mining man could not be a formation of the clamatile y had made through the night, they now authopy to be and are ident, and be in the angle of the chartery charper fields to be in the first of into hollows.

Drinking the coffee which Pallas forced upon her, Alice equin set forth, not with the others, but alone, walking like the distract I, darting wild glances hither and thither, and thing in an impassioned voice that walled through the wilder roos, so ming to penetrate every breath of air,—"Philip!

And now she saw where he had broken off evergreens the by bir, and flatt ring round and round the spot, like a lird crying after its robbed nest, she sobbed,—"Philip!

Philip I'

And then she saw kin, sitting on a log, pule and hargardlo king, his white face stained with blood and his hair mottled with it, a frightful gash across his temple and head, which he drappl upon his hand; and he tried to answer her. Before she could reach him he sank to the ground.

"He is deal?" she cried, flying forward, sinking bosile come to us!"

They hard her sharp cry, and, hastening to the spot, found her, pulsus the hidy at her feet, guing down into the deathly fee.

"Alice, den't look so, child. He's not deal—he's only film to Here, men, lift him up specilly, for he's night about the Ther's been mischief here—no mistake!"

Captain Wille breathed hard as he glared about up in his in. In. The theoret had commed to him that some one had the model of the years man for his valuable watch which his and the wall-like I purse he was supposed to carry. But nother watch and money were unlisterbed;—may be be in it till a and cut his head—if he should revive, they would know all.

To place him to the horse and hid him upon All is which is I in the proty room just arranged for her conduct the straight of the proty room just arranged for her conduct the straight of a post of the administration of th

He was sitting in the very spot where they had found him on the previous afternoon, with a heap of everywers millered about him, preoccupied in making garlan's, so that he saw nothing, heard nothing, until southing—it a my i to him a club wielled by some a will int who heler; tup belief him -struck him a blow which instantly deprived blin of his soners. How long he lay, blading and stinn hale could only gues; it somel to be dop night who he realled what had happened, and found him - If him on the gram he confured by the pain in his head and faint from head his l He mineral to crawl upon the lar, so as to lan his had upon his arms, and had been there many hours. III hard the shouts and saw the lights which can are him two or thre times, but he could not make note to talk to attract of tention. When he heard Alice's wire, he had hims if into a sitting posture, but the cill it was to great, and he sant ardin, exhausted, at the moment relief reciel line.

His hourers looked in each other's form as to placed his story. Who could have done that markers for the life What was the object? the pleasant young struct a half a country,—he had not been robbed; there were no Indians known to be about, and Indians would have think I their with with the scalping-knife.

Alas I the terrible secret projet at the heat of Alice Willia. She know, though no mortal lips had not be in a had the markers. A pair of open had the markers of the betrayed it. She had read "read" that it is not be was now extlent.

Should also do no monthly guilty man, page with a life of the denoted his crime. What we allow the formal in a criminal love har, and shallow have the vicinal National Landon to the graving trath in her count has a configuration of the suffice should he ever have the sufficient it; a matter by no needs—title has been have the will be received as a cough to know.

Desire of all the provide with a line of a line of the sign, and for two or three desires, It is a surject, a part of the time delimines; the provide the line is primiting of his dying than recognize Bright Mr. W. in a is P. i. a.

had that skill picked up by the necessity of being doctors to all accidents and discuses around them; and they exerted to had a to the utable for their unibriumite young exert.

Then it was that Mr. Wille found where the heart of his little old had gone a tray; and cars I him of for his folly in expecting her to a danger so probable. Yet, as he looked at her sweet five, worn with watching and trouble, he could not but helieve that the hund of the proudest aristocration earth was none too good for her, and that Philip would recognize her tenty and worth. If she must love, and he murried, he wall more willingly relign her to Philip Moore than to any other man. Albedack I experience as a naise, but she followed every motion of the good old colored woman, and stood religious interfere where she could be of any use.

Siting hear after hear by Philips believe, changing the wet clothes constantly to keep them cool, she heard words from his difficus hips which alled still more to her despair—for he pair—for he nate words, address I not to her, but to some her loved woman, some hearth of Virginia," now for away, unclosed woman, some hearth of Virginia," now for away, unclosed it is of her lover's denser, while to her fell the soll please ure of att aller men him.

Oh, that he may live, and not die by the hand of an agsasin, so into out a vi that to a nothless judicasy. Oh, that he may live to save this Virginia, whoever she may be, from the face of a hepeless monner. It will be joy enough for

In the save his line," sine crimb to here !!!

In a real pall of extreme prostration; but the years not and pall of extreme prostration; but the years not and a restrict a was excellent, and he recovered rapidly. Then how it pleased Pallas to cook him tempting disless and how it pleased Pallas to cook him tempting disless and how it pleased to be appetite with which he disless to be a prostrated with which he disless to be a prostrated with which he can be a prostrated with which he can be a prostrated as a prostrated with which he can be a prostrated with a part of a can be so homely or so can't be a their can be said that their can be said to be a can't be a can't

There is a the select Alice Bearing her last and the action of the rest of the selection of the selection was brought into it; and when Alice we did have asked her father of his wherealth is not also be left for the selection. She hoped that had it is it is the last disappeared, by father would have mentioned it, and that the act would have fixed suspicion upon him. She felt that he was havering about, that he often beheld her, when she was unaware of the secret gaze; she could not on lure to step to the dark after dark, and she closed the curtains of the windows with extremest care, especially in Philip's room.

The first light snow of November had fallen when the invalid was able to sit up all day; but, although he knew that his long absence would excite consternation among his file. Is at Center City, and that business at home required his attration, he found each day of his convalence so place and, that he had not strength of will sufficient to break the charm. To read to his young friend while she sawed; to watch her flitting about the room while he reclined up in a lunge; to talk with her; to study her changing countenance, grow or ry day more sweet to him. At first he thought it was grather behad been so kind to him. But a thrilling worm the ways gathered about his heart when he remains relithed abbing sound—"Philip! Philip!"

Finding himself thus disposed to linger, he was the receive that Alice was analous to have him to; she gave him no invitation to prolong his visit, and sall and equivocally, that if he did not wish to be indeed in 1 for the winter, he would have to depart as soon as his structure in the permit. Her father had promised him, when he can apply to take him down the river again when he was really, as he should be obliged to go down again for his whiter a restant he now waited his visit r's movements.

No words had possed between Aller and Poller on the site jest of the aftengated marker, yet the former half he material the trath was quessed by the faithful six of the last cold the departure of their cold.

"I declars, Munt Palies, I belt vol I to a more transportant. I've been a trouble me fill of I be a little of the my vality to see you gettler to the left of I be a little of the my, one day, when they were also to the first left into the hitchen-steps after the lary means retenants into the warmth, beth them the first within mile of a security without.

"One folks never gets tired of young, bright faces, masser Philip. But ole folks knows sometimes what's fer de best, more 'n young ones."

Then you think Miss Alice wants to get ril of me, and you second your darling's wishes—ch, Pallas?" and he looked at her, her ing she would contradict him.

If I do a' mos' any thing for my pickaninny—I lub her better don life; an' dar' never was anudder such a chile, so I tty and so good, as I know as has been will her sence she draw har tirs' bref. If I tought she wanted you to go, I'd want you to go, too, masser, not meanin' any disrespeck—and she do want you to go; but she's got reasons for it;" and sho shock her yellow turban reflectively.

"Do you think she is getting to dislike me?"

Dat's her own bisness, of she is; but dat ain't do main rea in. She don't like de look of that red sear down your first. She knows who made dat ugly sear, and what for they did it. She tinks dis a dingerous country for you, Misser Mare, and Pallas tink so too. Go way, masser, quick as you can, and ne' lest come back any more."

"But I shall come back, Aunt Pallas, next spring, to bring y as thing nies for all you've done for ma, and because I was —I shan't be able to stay away," he answere I, though a an what starth I am I puzzled by her revelation.

"Why me the able to stry 'way?" queried she, with a sharp glance.

"Oh, y a can gres, Aunt Pallas. I shan't tell you."

"People isn't allers satisfied with guessing-like to have things lin, and no mistake 'bout 'em," observed Pallas.

"Jet so. I am not satisfied with guessing who tried to kill en, and what their object was. I am going to ask Alico, this evenior. She's evid atly frightened about me; she won't it me stir a stip alone. So you think your pickaning is the tand the prattlest child alive, do you?"

"Dat I do."

won't you, auntic?"

with in this is the little of the contract to the least

"But can't you say something to encourage me?"

"You go 'long. Better tease somebody hain't get no ironin' on hand."

"You'll repent of your unkin iness soon, Aunt Pallus; for, be it known to you, to-morrow is set for my digurent, and when I'm gone it will be too late to send your answer after me;" and the young man rose, with a very becoming air of injured feeling which delighted her much.

"Hi! hi! of it could only be," she sight, I sking after him. "But we can't smoof tings out in dis yere worl' quite so easy as I smoof out dis table-cloth. He's one ob de family, no mistake; and masser's found it out, too, If re dis."

That night the family sat up late, Pallas busy in the kitchen putting up her master's changes of linen and cooked provisions for the next day's journey, and the master himself busied about many small affairs deman ling attention.

The two young people sat before a bluzing well-like in the front room; the settle had been drawn up to it for Philip's convenience, and his companion at his request had taken a seat by his side. The curtains were clessly drawn, yet Alice would frequently look around in a timil, will way, which he could not but notice.

"You did not use to be so timid."

"I have more reason now;" and she shaller it. "Until you were hurt, Mr. Moore, I did not think how near we might to murderers, even in our house."

"You should not allow it to make such an impression on your mind. It is passed; and such thinks stare ly happy twice in one person's experience."

"I do not fleer for my-li-it is for your, Mr. Merre."

"Philip, you called me, that night in the world. Suppose a form in dancer, little Allee, what would you risk for most in the She did not answer.

"Well, what would you risk for some one per large your father?"

"All things-my life."

Then their paids their finally name, or the range of tweet to point a near level a were to very new heart his level to return his level but to the reserver of the linear his level but the reserver.

tunes with him; could not sacrifice splendor and the passion for a limitation, for his sake—what would you think of her?"

"That she did not love him."

"But you do not know, little Alice; you have never been tempted; and you know nothing of the strength of fashion in the world, of the influence of public opinion, of the pride of a; parances."

"I have guessed it," she answered, sadly.

He thought there was a shadow of repreach in those pure ayes, as if she would have added, that she had been made to feel it, too.

"I loved a woman once," he continued; "loved her so rashly that I would have let her set her perfect foot upon my hashly that I would have let her set her perfect foot upon have let he

"Wisher name Virginia?"

"It was; how did you know?"

" You talked of her when you were ill."

"I'll warrant. But she wouldn't have sat up one night by my belief, for fear her eyes would be less brilliant for the my telefa, for fear her eyes would be less brilliant for the less to make a less tenne of the West to make a fixture for her to spond, in case she did not get hold of sometime for less by that time. Do you think I ought to make it for her?"

The was no answer. His companion's hard was droopin. He likelone of her hands, as he went on:

"I was so dizzled by her magnificence that, for a long time, I could see nothing in its true light. But my vision is the now. Virginia shall never have my fortune to sport. For me to twist are and her jeweled flager."

The hard held began to tremble.

"Now, little All o, supposing I had told got of such love, and you had profess to answer it, what sacrifies would you have made? Would you have given me that little gold in it you were about your nock-your only bit of ornance tation?"

"I would have made a serial of full as great in its way, a till a declaration in penny and proitin might have been to the last leave," she right have to his to a last leave, "she right have to his to a

'I would have refused the offered happiness if, by accepting it, I thought I should ever, by my ignorance of proprieties, give him cause to blush for me—if I thought my uncultivated tastes would some time disappoint him, that he would grow weary of me as a friend and companion because I was not truly fitted for that place—if I thought I was not worthy of him, I would sacrifice myself, and try to wish only for his less happiness."

Her eyes sank, as she ceased speaking, and the tears which would come into them, gushed over her checks.

"Worthy! you are more than worthy of the best man in the world, Alice! far more than worthy of me." crie! Philip, in a rapture he could not restrain. "O Alice if you only loved me in that fashion!"

"You know that I do," she replied, with that archaes so native to her, smiling through her tears.

"Then say no more. There-don't speak-lon't speak!" and he shut her mouth with the first kiss of a lover.

For a while their hearts b at too high with happiness to recall any of the difficulties of their new relation.

"We shall have small time to by plans for the fature now But I shall fly to you on the first breaks of spring. Allow Your father shall know all, on our way down the river. Oh if there was only a mail through this forlers region. I could write to you, at least."

"I shall have so much to do, the winter will specific rules; I must study the books you brought me. But I shall not allow myself to hope too much," she allow, with a said an inclination, such as sometimes is term of projectic instant.

"I can not hope too highly!" said Phillip, with enti-

CHAPTER VII.

SUSPENSE.

What was the construction of Alice when her father returned the evening of the day of his departure and told her he had concluded he could not be spared for the trip, and so, when they reached the mill, he had chosen Ben to fill his thee! Every vestige of color field from her face.

"O father! how could you trust him with Philip?" burst forth involuntarily.

Trust Ben? Why, child, thar ain't a handler sailor round the place. And if he wan't, I guess Moore could take care it hims if—he'll manage a graft equal to an old salt."

"Can't you go after them, father? ch, do go, now, this aight—this hour !"

"Why, child, you're crazy!" replied the raftsman, looking at lex in surprise. "I never saw you so foolish before. Go after a couple of young chaps full-grown and able to take core it. medics? They've the only sail-boat there is, besides—tail I in't think I shall break my old arms rowing after 'em when they've got a good day's start," and he laughed good-tail in My. "Go along little one, I'm 'fraid your love-cracked."

Gottle only sail-best there was! There would be no use, then, in making her father the confilant of her suspicions. It is in that if the half fashional this michance. Several of the model for into a quarrel, at the mill, that morning; a model to makinery half release, and so much business. In a lap a theorem, that he half in oblined to relinquish his jump. He half a late the model whater stores, and have as I a fix repose of all his compleyees; trusty, quick, however, a late model spent. Such half been that a fire many spent. Such half been the point of whater stores, and the point of whater at the many spent.

mark of Cain was secretly bran led upon the swarthy brow which once could have flashed back honest mirth upon them.

They say "the devil is not so black as he is paint to and surely Ben Perkins was not so utterly deprive as might be thought. He was a heathen; one of those white heathen, found plentifully in this Christian country, not only in the back streets of cities, but in the back depths of sparsely-settled countries:

He had grown up without the knowledge of religion, as k is taught, except an occasional half-un lerstool sensation sermon from some travelling missionary—he had nover been made to comprehend the beauty of the prevents of Christ-und he had no elucation which would teach him s life Lir dun! the noble principle of self-government. Un-1, -1-1, with a high temper and flery passions, generous and hindly, with a prille of character which would have been fine had in a still the enel, but which decenerated to envy and judger of his superiors in this imporant boy-nature-the real and the bad grew rankly together. From the day up a will be "hired out," a youth of eighteen, to Captain Willie, and saw Aller Wille, a child of twelve, looking skyly up at him the win har gold n carls, he had loved her. He had work it is the and early, striven to please his employer, shown him of her ly, courageous, and trustworthy-hald doe extra jobs that he might accumulate a little sum to invest in propring-ill in the hope of some time during to ask her to mary him. Her superior refinement, her innate delicacy, her sweet heavy a refeit by him only to make him love her the mare ! - raily. As the sen tills the other with warmth and light, as signific, his soul. It was not strange that he was infuring it is the sixter of another man stepping in and winning so a live at in it. etriven for so long-les saw in vitably that Al war it is ve Pailip Moore-this primed and detail start and in tree language, his time chatter, and his the many and the conceived a deadly hate for him. All that we swill him r w, cheking down every thing and. Healt well him he browl over his wrong, as he regarded them; graning a stanimprodent, revenzelol. Then the oppositioning came, and has fell beneath the temperation.

Chance had savel him from the community of the total though not from the guilt of the intent. He had thought him self, for half a day, to be a murderer,—and during the self, for half a day, to be a murderer,—and during the self the right look half a day, to be a murderer,—and during the self the the last of the desperate man. We have he had self red so awfally in conscience that he was the last effect of the coape of his intended victim, or whether he shore still to consummate his wish, his own soul only knew.

Hveryl ly at Wille's mill had remarked the change in him from a my youth full of jests and nonsense to a quiet, mores, man, working more diligently than ever, but sullenly risting all advances of sport or confidence.

If he was secretly strungling for the mastery over evil, it was a carious fatality which threw him again upon a temptation so overwhelming in its case and security of accomplishment.

All, well did the unhappy Alice realize how easily now he could follow lds intent—how fully mobile power was that unsaying a sum who had already suffered so much from his hank. Appetite and slop for ook her; if she slept it was but to drain of a host gliding down a river, of a strong man thing a would one in his grasp and hurling him, wounded and holy is, into the waters, where he would sink, sink, till the waves half I dover his flating heir, and all was gone. Many a night she start I from her sleep with terrified shricks, which alarm I her flather.

Third is a proper paid to be having the nightmare so, I'll a Sathin' or another is wrong about her—hain't no be true in it. I do hope she ain't roin' to be one of the ser a line of kind of wom a folks. I detect such. Her hain, early be got by a quicker and find out what's the matter with her; which tell yet quicker an she will me. Fix her up some kind of tea."

The definition of the state of him all his life."

the raftsman, moodily.

Beth Mr. William Paller began to less their high epinion of the young man, as they witnessed the silent suffering of their darling. His going down the river without his expected company had cheated Philip out of the revolution has had desired to make; and Alice, with that excessive differ yet some timid young girls, had not even could be here to the her good old nurse.

Much better it would have been for her place of mind, had about to her friends—her love well by the Theorem.

they had seen good reason for her apprehensions, they might have chased the matter down, at whatever trouble, and put her out of suspense. But she did not do it. She shut the growing terror in her heart where it follows a lar life day by day.

There was no regular communication between Willes mill and the lower country, and in the winter what little there had been was cut off. The lovely, linguing In line summer days, in the midst of which the two voyagers had stood, were ever, and ice closed the river the very day after the return of Bon.

A sudden agony of hope and far convaled the heat of Alice, when her father entered the house our day, and announced Ben's arrival.

"Did he not bring me a letter? was there not litter for you.

It would be so natural that he should write, at let to he father, some message of good wishes and attended to the safe journey—if she could see his own held writing, sin would be satisfied that all was well.

"That' was none for me. If Ben get a lett riry i, I show he'll tell you so, as he's coming in with some tide."
"Have you any thing for me—any means or he're?"

It was the first time she had not Bo, in the formalist that never-to be-formation night of the home working had now he looked her in the eyes, with at any simulation of its appared to her as if the shahar which had but the home working to he containly be held to be real to the day of Philip's we up to have he had a property of the way. Alice could not tell; she wait if rima to specifical the prisoner waits for the verdict of a jury.

"Thar' ain't any letter, M. s Ali ." he rejied. " het ta r's a prokage-some presents for you, and some for Pallas, too, from Mr. Moore. He told me to tell you that he was safe and tound, and hoped you'd accept the things he sent."

His eyes did not quail as he made this statement, though he know that she was searching them keenly. Perhaps there was a letter in the bundle. She carried it to her own room and the it open. No! not a single written word. The gifts for the old servant-silk aprons, gay-colored turbans, and a ring of gold beals-were in one bundle. In another was a la ly's dressing-case, with brushes, perfumeries, and all those Ir tty tritles which grace the feminine toilet, a quantity of flae writing materials, paper-folder, gold-pen, some exquisite and engravings, and, in a tiny box, a ring set with a single pearl. That ring! was it indeed a betrothal ring, sent to her by her lover, which she should wear to kiss and pray ever? or was it intended to help her into a bond with his Dur! rer? Bagerly she scanned every bit of wrapping-paper to find some proof that it was Philip's own hand which nad main up the costly and tasteful gifts. She could find nothing to satisfy her. They might have been purchased with his money, but not by him. The ring which she would have worn to joyi: lly lal she been certain it had come from him, she int back in its case without even trying it on her finger.

"O Gol" she murmured, throwing herself upon her kneer,

"must I bear this suspense all this endless winter?"

Yes, all that en lless winter the weight of suspense was not to be liked-nor for yet more mis rable months.

Dember set in extremely cold, and the winter throughout was one of unusual a verity.

As the Christmas holilays drew near, that time of feasting " profess to the colored people raised in "ole Virginny," in the stirred himself a little out of his perpetual laziness. If he would give due assistance in beating errs and grinling The chapping suct and picking fowls, as well as "keep his wir in kin llin r-wood," Pallus promised him rich rewards in "he way of dainties, and also to make him his favorite dish a-woodehuck pie.

"it r'm in int I d'uit fela bit of heart hout fixis' . The second of the contraction I the lister properties, a White he is a Christian folks 'nuff to keep Chris'mas, even in de willerness; but what's de use of cookin' and cookin' and dar's Miss Alice don't eat as much as dat frozen chick I brought in and put in dat basket by de fire."

"But dar's masser, he cat well 'nuif, -and I I-I's mighty hungry dese days. Don't stop cookin', Pallas."

"You hain't got no more feelin's den a e min n nigger, Saturn. Nobody 'd tink you was brought up in one de lest families. If I could only tink of a methin' new dat would coun up pickaninny's appetite a little!"

"Praps she'll eat some my worldback pi," sizzetel

Saturn.

It was a great self-denial for him to propose to share a dish which he usually reserved especially to himself, but he too, felt as tender as his organism would permit, toward his youthful mistress.

"Our missus eat woodchuck plut you go 'l' ng. Saturu; she wouldn't stomach it. Dat's night's dish. I depart our chile begins to look jus' as missus did de your af reshedied. I feel worried 'bout her."

"Des you? Mebbe slie's got de rillumatin er de na-you'd fix up some of yer liniment, will."

"Wall, wall, oberybrelly has dir troubles own in an' ones like our chile. Dis is a withe land a promite and a p tion, and dat is de reason our words tak fire and our house burn up; and now our dear chille mest pettracher hart Bout semeboly as wen't my well r he has her at a t. She'll go of consumption jes' as misses went. In i'll all 'll a thought our family well ever come to a handly Irmember when Mortimer Morte kept up de plant in in it in style 'fore he sol' chery bully but y u and I. Saint, and kep' us cause we wouldn't hab de family, and tak us to New York. Mebbe it was with a fine to take sit s with my young missus, and help her to get married way sin hid uni run 'way will her, and se to her tru thick and this ID t I see her die, and now, likely, I'll be restrict to a lar die die. Dun know what poor old we man his fir to burr all her children for. When I tink of all de minimples at I to chicken-pies I use to make, and so ett, for Caris'us, I i ." full to heart for to lift dis clay, ... the the

Yet the preparations progressed, and on Christmas and New Year's day the men at the mill were supplied with a feast; but Alice could not bring herself to decorate the house with wreaths of evergreen, according to custom—it brought back had fears too vividly. The unceasing ery of her heart was for the river to open. She counted the hours of the days which must drag on into weeks and months.

Ben now came frequently to the house. If Alice would not talk to him, he would make himself agreeable to the old servants; any thing for an excuse to linger about where he could obtain glimpses of the face growing so sad and white. Mr. Wilde had always favored him as a work-hand, and now he invited him often to his home. He hoped that even Ben's company would amuse his daughter and draw her away from her "love-sickness."

It was a few weeks after the holidays that, one evening, Mr. Willie took Alice upon his knee, smoothing her hair as if

So wre a buby, and looking fondly into her face.

"I've some curious news for you, little one," he said, with a latte. "Would you believe that any one had been thinking I my little cub for a wife, and had asked me if he might talk to her about it?"

"Was it Ben, father ?"

"Yes, it was E n. No doubt you knew of it before, you sly puss!"

"Ir fired him bong aro, father. Didn't he tell you that?"

" No."

Weill you be willing I should marry a person like

"No, not william. Once I'd have set him all set if he'd had to imprehense to mention it. But you're inling so, Alice, and I'me so have me and so shot up here. I know how it is. I'me so have their mates; and it you want him, I had to have their is in hit to her any a rious o'f ction. He's the best there is in here is in him. I have the rethen a that ring, deceiving gentlemen, Alice. I want he had not been at here to imagine you'd never marry, had have known to to not I had yer old father; but I ought to have known to to not I had yer old father; but I ought to have known to to not in the way of the world. Twent't my way, nor your mather's way. No, Alice, if yer ever in here, and world to marry, makes I have the man's a villata, I shall make no objections. Ben loves you, my dear, desperately. A girl should give two thoughts before she throws away such a love as his. 'Tain't every man is capable of it."

"But I'm engaged to Philip Moore, father. We have each ther." Her blushing check was pressed against his that he might not see it.

"Alice, my child," said the raft man very gently, in a voluted of pity and tenderness; "Mr. Moore is a ruscal. He may have told you that he loved you, but he den't. He don't intend to marry you. He's a d—proud arist crat!" waxing wrathy as he went on. "There! there! don't you fell hart; I know all about him. Knew't he made fan of us, after all we'd done for him, in his store down to Center City, when he didn't know Ben was listenin'. Besides, he advis I B u to marry you, to keep you from breakin' your heart alout him on East to marry a girl there. So you say you must think no more of that ruscally fellow, Allow. If he ever does not back here I'll whip him."

"Ben told you this?" cricil Alice, her eyes the ling fire and her white hips quivering. "And you believed the inflances rie, father? No! no! Ben has rear larged him, father—he has murdered my Philip, and has invented this lie to prevent our expecting him. O Philip!"—her excitement every wered her and she fainted in her father's arms.

Now that the tension of susp use had given way, and she deemed herself certain of the fate of her lever, she yields I for a time to the long-smothered ageny within her, going from one fleinting-fit to another all through that writing i pirit.

The next day, when compared enough to take short liber father all—Ben's offer of marriage, his threats, the circumstantial evidence which fixed the gailt of the assalt in the woods upon him, and her belief new that Philip had been made away with. The rationan blands was startly; and to quiet and encourage his child, he promised to sate I by to morrow, upon the ice, and short down to Comer Chy, that her fears might be disposed for confirmal. Due that very night the weather, which had been growing warranter a week, maked into rain, and the including to the train.

B

thing. And if you'll pick up courage to think so, and make y reelf as easy as you can, I'll start the very first day it's possible. Likely in March the spring 'll open. You may go it is with me, too, if you wish, so as to learn the news as an as I do. I'll say nothing of my suspicions to young trains, but try to treat him the same as ever, till I know be to sarves different."

CHAPTER VIII.

AWAY FROM HOME.

A QUAINT party were to be seen positive the meth some of the streets of Center City one April day of the fill wing spring A tall and virorous man, with a keen, intelligent flag, class in a calico shirt, a l'une-woolen hunter's frak and backshin breeches, strode on as if anxious to reach his distinction; or, rather, as if used to making good time over endless prairies and through unsurveyed forests. By his side walked a your r girl whose dress, though of the best mut rials, was antique as our grandmothers'; a broaddrinned hat shall after the loveliest ever beheld in that city; her little sliggers with their silver buckles peeped out from beneath her short in the Thora who were fortunate enough to see her as sie per lell a t know which to telmire most - the explicite, unstall i grave of her manners, which was in position as her hardy, or the scraphic importance of her expression. She had president compenien, looking gravely dirward with the grant !! eves, only occasionally giving the crowl a handling start ! look, when it present too near. A town as belief to be an ancient colored couple, the men alert, and white-ey-1, rolling smiles as he pared, evil adverg sing all the att ntion of the body recar to be concentrated and his fluiding ve to his flowered cost, and bran now botter; the witten a perfect Hack June, really superb in her air and physical warring her ready-tolded yellow tordance if it warming the account. Sin sellom took her eyes of the year min when she the lowed, except occidently to from at some in policities who stared too hard.

The group would their vay award until they reduced names of "Reymond & Mer," in got better opening to we four-story trick store of this thriving new town, and person the view of outsiders.

"Captain Wille! how do you do? you're down ourly this spring. Well, the mill's waiting for you to feel it. Cand down on a raft?"

"Yes, Mr. Raymond, a thundering big one. Brought my family this time to give 'em a chance to pick out a few things for thems lves. My daughter, sir."

The merchant gave the young laly a chair. She took it, mechanically, but her heart, her eyes, were asking one question of the smiller, curious man, the friend and partner of her own Philip, who for the first time began to suspect the cause which had kept the latter so long, "hunting and fishing" up at Wilde's mill. Could be look so smiling, so assured, and her Philip be dead? The cry: "Where is he?" trembled the rive on her lips.

"Yes, a thun lering big raft we got out this spring. Woodchoppers to work all winter," continued the raftsman, walking along farther from his daughter, and speaking with apparent carebsoned. "By the way, where's Mr. Moore? did he get home safe, after his spell of sickness, at our house last fall?"

"Oh, yes! he got home safe and in fine spirits. He was son as well or hetter than ever. I expect he got pretty good care," and the merchant glanced over at the young girl respectfully. Mr. Hayment was a god-Leart-l, refinel young married Lian; but libe bed been gross or impure, or not over-feetillous, or it all of a jet, there was semething about both father and "illi to suppressed it clims but there of respect and won leriter almiration, Allee Wille's beauty was of a kind to dely on. i.m. She might have wern sackeleth and ashes, or Band and thick become or a Turkish dress, or a Puritin mailthis, or a que his robe, it would have made but small differ-Char; her backles was of that overmetering kind which draws the harts of high and low, and makes every men hal in her present, therettal of every lesser consideration-1. her is a total well of the charms as hers have her great paner when wer they have been found—they have er', i perila un antitione, and de monetgenies und rate, will they were or taken, wither and thirler. It is not tir. . th. t.A. . sper and excline and let ber still more unusual un and interior in the contraction in the interior, should at ones have common hel the reverence of people of the world, in spite of the quainter of manner and attire, in themselves pretty and piquant.

Athough her father had spoken in a low voice, Alice had heard his question and the answer. The splender of happiness broke over her countenance—blushes rose to her checks and smiles to her eyes; she hardly dared to glance in any direction lest she should see her lover unexpectedly, and betray her joy to strangers.

"Is he about the store this merning; or will I have to go to the mill to see him?" asked the raftsman.

Moore has gone on East; he's been away several weeks now, and I hardly know when to expect him. He was called there quite unexpectedly, upon business connected with his uncle, and their relatives in England. It would not surprise me at all if he should bring a bride home—that is, if he can possuable his fair cousin that the West is not such a terrible savage wilderness as she supposes."

Mr. Raymond was perfectly honest in this remark. He knew that Virginia Moore used to be the idul of his friend; and as Philip had not communicated the change in his idea. he still supposed that Philip was only waiting to get rise enough to go home and marry her; and as Philip was a perdoing so well with his western enterpries, he had planted it all out in his own imagination—fortune, acceptance, and the happy fluids of a grand wedding. He could not he perty forester to see how she received the new but the perty person of the old others we man had a mark the perty person of the old others we man had a mark the between them, and he could not see her face.

"Laws, Miss Alice, do see them yere callit to the yite starperb! Look at that red one with the idea havers—it in it what handsome though, as this with the yallor. My! my! that's a jewerlly shop across the way. Yer fallor on hit to take you in dar', fast place. Young gals likes them pare I. ... darlin', dis don't compare will New York City. Le's have a drink of water, and step over do street."

All this volubility was to some a the year of it in mentality. A pitcher of water stool on the counter, now her, and she poured a glass for her mistrest. But All a marel the glass away, and arose without may signs of this and points her face; but the expression had change i—an impuliate apposed every feature; she asked the marellant to show here so.

of his goods in a clear, low tone as sweet as it was passionless. Her hand did not tremble as she turned over silks and laces.

"Good for her! She's got her father's grit," thought the referman to himself, while his own throat swelled almost to choking with anger and grief, and he felt that if he only had Philip Moore within sight he would have the satisfaction of of thrushing a little conscience into him.

Neither he nor Alice any longer doubted the statements of B n Perkins. Mr. Moere had ridiculed them—had mockingly siven another permission to console her whom he had forsaken—had said that he was going East to marry a more fit combailing. As the raftsman looked in the quiet face of his child which repelled sympathy with a woman's pride—that pride so the ribbe because it covers such tortured sensibilities—his blood with a power with ungovernable rage. He was not accustomed to emeeding his sentiments upon any subject.

Let them finnified fixin's alone, Alice," he said, taking her built in I drawing her away. "Men that make it a business to hen the that sort of thing, grow about as flimsy as their wars. I despise 'em. I want you to understand, Mr. Rayband, that all connection between me and this firm, business to other, is dissolved. I won't even take your cussed money. When Mr. Moore returns, tell him that the laws of hospitality is a bad by your four-stery-bricks ain't known in squatters' which at life ever comes on my premises again I'll consider the surprised merchant could reply be had strode forth.

"C'me leng, Saturn! don' stan' dar' starin'; don't yer see in a re's gone? I shall be sorry I brought yer long of yer in a labe will more prepisciousness. What der s'pose is 'I tink your misus and masser is, of you don't act like a labeling nizzer? If yer don't do credit to Miss Alice, I'll the lring you 'way from home agin;" and Pallas took is r nizzer" by the abow and drew him away from the last, the garray of dry-goo is and ready-made clothing.

That alternoon Captain Wills and his daughter sat in a large transfer sit in a large transfer of the hotel, overlooking the street. It, by thing was novel to Alice. This was absolutely her large in necessary from her forest home. Yet upon all the large is necessary from her forest home. Yet upon all the large is necessary from her forest home.

Anout the rapid rise and growth of some of our western cities there is an air peculiar to them ly - in experi nor unique in the history of civilization. Situate land lee nes of unparalleled beauty, they seem to jur up a and dictorb the harmony of their surroundings; brick and plast r. Lew shingles, and glowing white paint, unsublued by time, rie up in the midst of fairy-land; rude wharves just over the silver waters where erst the silent cance of the Indian only glidel; will goses thush the Lill-sides crowned with sull a dwillias; stately old firests loom up as backer unds to the basist of busy streets. The shrill cry of the steam-whithestartles the dreamy whippeerwill; the paddle-wheel of the intradice steamboat frightens the in loi nt silm a from his visites of prace. As the landscape, so the pople; coriously mind of rough and refined. Center City was ear of the most picturesque of these young towns; and, at present, one of the most presperous. Broken-down speculators from the Bost curin thither and renewed their foremes; and energrishing young men began life with flattering prespects.

It was upon the principal street that Alice at an 11 i.e.l. Streams of people hurried by, have the waves of the river past her cabin in the wood. She saw halls dread in a fash, a differing will by from her own; across the way, in a suite of parlors in the second story, she saw, through the opin think a young girl of about her own are sitting at a modul in the ment, from which she drew, as if by mode, music that hall her listener as by gotton chains. New the order and aims came into the mind of the raftsman's doubt in. Prills was struggling to lead the worm is well in large hall make.

" Father, will you said me to she if"

For a long time there was no asser; he had was best upon his land. She crept upon his ham, in her little-driven, and drew away the hand.

"It'd be under the world of sixt any or to see it per to me of them be a like the by They'll be an per planty of vanity and worse thin a my child; they'll make you are also by. I've made a fall we. You are also by. I've made a fall we. You make a list them that's about you, and not good on what to be like. Go to should you want to child; go, and learn to put on airs and despise those who would give their heart's blood for ye. I shall make no objections."

"Do you think I could learn to be so very bad, father? If al- nt it," and she kissed him.

"Ther', thar', child, I didn't mean to deny ye. But I feel litter to-day—hard and bitter—as I used to in days gone by, when your mother died, turned off by them that were ashaned of yer father. If you'll only keep like yer mother, you may do what you will. She went to school, and she knew more than a dozen fine-lady scholars; but it didn't spoil her. May be I've done wrong to bring you up the way I have—to visit my experience and my doubts on your young head. We must all live and fearn for ourselves. Go to school, if you want to. I'll try and get along without my little cubbic for a year or two."

"It's hard, father-hard for me-but I wish it." Pride was staling the heart of the forest maiden. "But are you able, factor; can you pay the expense."

This thought never came to her until after she had his promise.

"Yes, I'm able—and if it's done, it shall be done in the best style. I haven't cut down all the pine timber I've set affoat for the last fift on year, without laying up something for my ob. I want you to dress as well as any you see, and study whatever you like, and play lady to yer heart's content. You'd better find a dress-maker, the first thing, and not be share last every time you step out of the door. Get yourself silts and satins, girl, and hold your head up like the queen of the prairie."

When Cartain Wille returned up the river, he and his sable the made a melancholy journey; for the light of their eyes, the joy of their hearts, was left behind them.

A young lail o's minary, "a flourishing young institution, builtially lacated in a healthy region, with spacious grounds the slat rious river-breezes," etc., etc., held prisoner, the wild bird of the forest.

Where's your darghter?" asked Bon Perkins of his emtainly to hear that she had been claimed as his bride by Philip.

"Yer story was true, Ben, though I did ye the wrong to doubt it. Alice will never be the wife of that counter-junger. But she'll never be yours, neither; so you might as well give up, first as list. Go off somewhere, Ben, and find somewhere, else; that's my advice."

"Look-a-here, Captain Wille, I know you mean the lest, and that my chance is small; but I tell you, sir, jest as leng as Alice is free to choose, and I've got the ath and sense to try for her, I shan't give her up. Never, sir! I'll work my fingers off to serve you and her—I'll wait years—I'll do any thing you ask, only so you won't lay any thing in my way."

The raftsman looked pityingly in the hargard face of the speaker—the face which a year are was so bright and by isla. He saw working in those dark lineaments, in the swart black coursing under the chive skin, in the glam of the black eyes, passions difficult to check, which might urge him in fature years to yet other crimes than the one into which he had already been betrayed. ,

"You're high-tempered, Ben, my boy, and a little to rough to suit a girl like mine. She knows what your temper has already led you to do;" and he looked straight at the you'le as he spoke, whose eyes wavered and sunk to the round—it was the first intimation he had had that his gold was supported. "Why not go off, and that supported has a fellow on the certh, and it only to happy to marry you? Than's plenty such chances—and you'd be a deal happier."

"Don't, don't talk so!" barst forth Ben, impeter only. "I com't do it, and that's the end on 't. I've tried to get away, but I'm bound here. It's like as if my feet were the late the ground. I've done had thinks in my det raination to be pothers away. I know it, and I own up to it. I've had despirate—crary! But I aim't a had fill w. If Miss Alies would smile upon me, 'pars to made I oblid be had—'pars to me I'd try to get to be as a last she in. Even if he mever would marry me, if she'd let me stay 'round and work for you, and she didn't take up with no only class I'd be content. But if I have to give her up entirely, I expect I'll make a pretty bad man, cap'n. I've all kinds of wicked thoughts at mit it, and I can't help it. I ain't made of milk-and-water I'd rather fight a bar' than court a girl. I shan't never ask an ther wennen to have ne—no, sir! I'd 'ave made you a girl sen, if all hands had been willin'. But if M'2s Alice make herself a fine la ly to catch some other sweet. I ly-killer like the one that's given her the mitten, it's her characters. She'll up and marry somebody that won't speak to her old father, I s'posc."

"Thar's no telling," answered the raftsman, sadly; for, in truth, the chanced manner of his darling before he left her, lay like a weight upon his memery and heart. He felt a chard of sympathy binding him to the young man, as if theirs Wis a country in cause. Alice seemed to have receded from them, as in a dream, growing more cold and reserved, as she all 1 into the distance. Her trouble, instead of flinging her there elsely into her father's arms, had torn her from him, and thurshit her self-control. She had deserted her home, had I it him to care for himself, while she fitted herself for some Sill re into which he could not come. That "sharper than a Thenth to the thenkless chill," he was tempted to call ier. Yet his heart refused such an accusation. She had In sull aly shaken in her innecent faith in others, had n wound din pride and described in love-and her present I. I was the high reaction of the blow. Presently she " .! I be here if arain, would come back to her home and it i i mille the with the same molest, affectionate, gentle

It it he would treat her differently; he would gratify her hope of the location. She should have books, music, fine i miture, the cith s. He did not ask himself what all these handle he worth without that paramount necessity of the hind miniposity on minimality. Alast the radiaman, bring his id him selve in a, help his light and schishly thought which he is not enly up a himself; but the lattle him had been a to the parent nest, fluttering on him the himself in the consciousness of the parent nest, fluttering the into the untried world, impelled by the consciousness of

Wings

CHAPTER IX.

A ROLAND FOR AN OLIVER.

- "You are rich, Philip!"
- "Yes, Virginia, or soon shall be."
- "How like a fairy-story it all sounds."
- "Or a modern novel,"
- " We can be happy nine, Philip!"

The two young people were leaning over the balastrade of a balcony of the summer residence of Mertimer Moore. The rich moonlight was still permeated with the resy tinges of sunset; the early dew called out the frammes of a neur mearlow in which the grass had been cut that day, and its odors were mingled with the perfumes of reses and like in the garden beneath the balcony. It was an hour to into xi. . to the souls of the young and loving. If Virginia had be a dressing herself for a ball she would not have use I mere care than she had shown in the simple aftern on till take now wore-simple, and yet the result of consumn. to tack A single string of pearls looped up the heavy brule of black hair, an Indian muslin robe, in whose fell's lurled precius perfumes, floated about her form, the wille, fall shaves falling away from the ivery arms, gave softness to their rout I dentlines. A bunch of violets needed in the sand-transfer it. flabric where it was gathered over her besing The cruzing tint of her low, smooth forehead just de parci in her chees to that faint flush which you see in the heart of a tar - ; her straight brows, long lashes, and the deep, durk eyes smilling under them, all showed to w nderful a runting in the delicious light.

As she uttered the last words, she hill her head lightly upon Philip's arm, and looked up into his face. He was tally aware, at that moment, of her attractions; a smile, the recording of which she could not fully fathern, answered her owners he said:

"I hope we can be happy, my fair cousin. I expect to be very much blessed as soon as a slight suspense which I endure is done away with."

"Why should you feel suspense, Philip? every thing smiles upon you."

"I see you are smiling upon me, my beautiful cousin; and that is a great deal, if not every thing. You always promised to smile upon me, you know, if I ever got gold enough to make it prudent."

Philip. You know that I have always thought more of you than any one else; and if I would not marry you when poor, it was because I dared not. Now we are equal—in fortune, youth, health. My father is so much better. He was out walking this afternoon; the country air has benefited him. The doctor thinks it may be years before he has another attack. You've been very kind to him, Philip. When our fortunes are joined, we can live almost as we please—as well as I care to live. Won't it be charming?"

The tapering white hand slid down upon his own.

"Very. You remember that trite passage in the Lady of Lyons, which the mob, the vulgar crowd, are still disposed to encore. Supposing we change the scene from the Lake of Como to the banks of the Hulson—listen, Virginia! how prettily sentiment sounds in this moonshine:

" A palare lifting to eternal summer Its marble walls, from out a glossy lower Of callet filmer, musical with birds, Whose songs should syllable thy name! At noon We'd set betweenth the arching vines, and wonder Why earth should be unhappy, while the heavens Stall lett us youth and love. We'd have no friends That were is thevers; is ambition, save To excel them all in lave-that we might smile To think how poorly elapsence of words Translates the poetry of hearts like ours. And when night came, and let the breakthless heavens, We'd grass what star should be our home when lore Because immertal; while the performed both Stein the un't the most of alabaster langes, And every mer was beary with the sails Of erang groves and maker of sweet lates, And mariners of law featitions that gust forth In the raist of reses! That the u like the picture?

Go on, Virginia, can't you act your part?".

"Let me see, can I recall it?-

"Oh, as the bee upon the flower, I hang Upon the honey of thy cloquent tengue;
Am I not blest? And if I love to wildly—
Who would not love the allie Virginia?"

"A very passable actress you are, cousin. I'll have thought you really meant that, once, you put such fervor in your voice. But—

It is the prints thou levest, a t the same."

"Nay, Philip, like Pauline, I must plead that you wrong me. Already, before my father summon I you, lefter we heard the whisper of your coming fortune, I had reall to search you out and take back my cruel restation—in recent to myself than to you. I found that I had overall my powers of endurance—that I did not know my own hard. Dear Philip, will you not forgive me? Remember how I was brought up."

Two tears glimmered in the moonlight and plashed up a his hand. They ought to have melted a st nire and plashed up than his.

"Willingly, Virginia. I forgive you from my heart—intermere, I thank you for that very refeed which you now regret. If that refusal had not driven me into the walls of the West, I should never have met may perfect if the formal had hook. But I have found her there. A woman a could rather, as beautiful as yourself—as much more to the rather, as boulded than prile; an Eve in intermed which a soul as crystal as a silver lake; graceful as the brown and the will fawns; as loving as love it if; and so increase that the does not know the worth of money, and didn't in prima about the settlements when I asked her to marry now. Think of that, Virginia!"

"Are you in exmest, Philip I"

"I am. I am serry for your disquintment, my sweet coasin, and hope you have not thrown a ray any any and the chances while waiting for the I'm pring to merce. I say any a series as steam can carry me, to just an end to that seeper a which I spoke. My little lind is dop in the west many and looking out for me with the ablied eyes of hom, so want to for I promised to be back long ago. Your father's affairs are in a tangled condition, I warn you, Virginia; and you'd better make a good match while you've still the reputation of loing an hoirest. I've been trying to get my uncle's matters in a shape for him; but I'm quite discouraged with the result."

" Perhaps that's the reason you have forgotten me so easily, Philip."

"I should expect you, my disinterested and very charming cousin, to entert in such a suspicion; but my pretty forester lives in a lor-cal in, and has neither jewels nor silk dresses. So, you see, I am not mercenary. Her 'loveliness needs not the facign aid of ornament.' She looks better with a wild-too in her hair than any other lady I ever saw with a wreath of diamonds."

"You are in a very generous mood, this evening, Philip Man, You might at least spare comparisons to the woman you have refused."

I called any wounds upon your heart, cousin; for that's nothing but concentrated carbon—it's yet beyon!

The fall of the and it's nothing now but a great diamond—

Try valuable, no doubt, but altogether too icy cold in its sparkle for me."

the properties of the plader-yet I was certainly more merciful than you I temp sol my reful with tears of regret, while

I take yours with punent little left by sarcasma"

"Da't pull the will to to pict so, Virginia. I love those to orse; and that's the reason you were them to night. If I like i llow I you own taste, you'd have wern japonious. It is not ly, I must go to me rrow. I have remained away to a my butines much longer than I should; but I could be in the sound has sikness and dislouding until I saw to be to get my uncle in his sikness and dislouding until I saw to be to get the was kind to me in my boylood, he made to be in he of what I am, and if he did not think me fitted to be in he for the hear of his family to the next generation, I can will be greated for what he did do."

"Yer do not give me credit for the change which has come to rule -if yer did, yer could not have me so coolly. I'm be no be not up in separations as I was once. Ab, Philip i this old country-house will be intolerably lonely when you are sone."

He looked down into the leantiful face trembling with emotion; he had never seen her when she look I so fair is then, because he had never seen her when her facilities were really so deeply touched. The memory of the doup post in he had once felt for her swept back over him, tunneltants as the waves of a sea. Her cheek, wet with tears, and this last I with feeling, pressed against his arm. It was a done rains hour for the peace of that other young mailen in the far West. Old dreams, old habits, old hopes, old associates, the glitt ring of the waves of the Hudson, familiar to him from infancy, the scent of the sea-breeze, and the call is of the lilles in the hame-stead garden, the beautiful face up in his arm which he had watched since it was a baba's ray for him its orall and those things had power, and were weaving along him a ray it spell.

"What does that childish, ignorant young thing know of love, Philip? If some rustic fellow with ray challe, who could not write his own name, had been the first to tak her. she would have said 'Yes' just as pratily as she did to y a But I have been tried-I know others, myself, and you My judgment and my pride approve my at the. Then the West is no place for a man like you. You to ! to ! and bitious-to plan out high things for your fature. I aller ma-Lition in a man. I would not have him sit at my int day and night, and make no effort to conquer remain. I would have him great, that I might have his greaters. I would aspire with and for him. You might be a shining light hard P..... where it is a glory to shine. Why will you throw yourself away upon a rule and un ultivat le manaity? Stay here a week or two longer, and think better of the medical he you have chosen."

The moon hung in the havens, high and propolations the tiles of the occas, who exclust they could almost have and like the moon, his and some, the manager of Aller Wille hung in the heaven of Philips home calling to earthly tide of pass in which beat and market in his traction. He can inhered that to ching a same of his that so would sacribbe hers if to him, at any time, and he could not think her love was a chance thing, which would have been given to a commoner man just as readily.

"I have tarried too long already, Virginia; I must go tomorrow,"

He did not go on the morrow; for while they stood there upon the balcony in the summer moonshine, a servant came hastily with word, that the master of the house was again struken down, in his library, as he sat reading the evening paper.

He was carried to his room, and laid upon his bed in an unconscious state. Everybody seemed to feel, from the moment of his attack, that this time there was no hope of his recovery. The family physician had only left him and returned to the city a day or two previously. The evening at would be at the landing just below in fifteen minutes; Philip ordered a trusty servant to proceed on board of her to New York, and bring back the medical attendant by the return boat in the morning. Meanwhile he did what little he could for the relief of the unconscious man, while Virginia, I the as her dress, the flowers in her bosom withering beneath the tears which fill upon them, sat by the bedside, holding the paralyzed hand which made no response to her clasp. Hours passed in this manner; toward morning, while both set wat hing for some sign of returning sensibility to the doublely features, the sufferer's eyes unclosed and he looked a at him with a wan bring air-

"Where is Alice? Alice! Alice! why don't you come?

I've forgiven you, quite, and I went you to come home."

"He is thinking of my sit r," whitpered Virginia, looking with new into the eyes which did not recognize her, and inclining her consinue reach the side.

"Den't til my sin is dal-Alice, the pride of my how e-20t dead l'a

"Oh, it is terrible to see him in such a state. Philip, can't "Virginia, I or child! I'm afraid he is beyond mortal aid.

Be trave, my dear piel, I will help you to bear it."

the construction of the property and the construction of the line of the line

"Virginia, is that you? My per child, I am dying. Noth. ing can save me now. I leave you alone, no father, no mother, sister, or brother, or husband to care for you when I am gone. Philip, are you here? will you be all the to Virginia? Do not hesitate, do not let prile e nir l y a la this hour. I know that I rejected you once, when you are to be my son; but I see my mistake new. Yeu have been very kind and unselfish to me since I sent for you. Yet are a man of prudence and honer. I should die contact II I knew Virginia was your wife, if you had not a the and a the lars to call your own. Poor sirl! she will have very little, after all my vain seeking of wealth for her. Gold is halling -hoppious is all Virginia, take warning by me. I am a witness of the hollowness of pride. I have been a sala !! discontented man for years. The mentry of my cracky to my Alice has stood like a specter between me and juy. Choose love-marry for love. Philip is no re then we mile you; try to make him Lappy. My lay, you in not special Take her hand, here, and promise me that you will take a . . ! care of my last and only child."

He had uttered all this in a low velo, recilly, as if at his strength would not last him to say what he will distinct ginia turned to her cousin and scized his hand.

"Philip! Philip! can you refuse on you deart man to?
O father! I shall be also in this world."

"Why do you not promise may and let me disting a property of that stem comment in his voice which had become a part of him; "do you me the my child?"

"Not as I did once. At least-but the 's no realist. Do not distress yourself, uncl., about Virginia. I will be to be a true and faithful brother. I promise to come or her and share with her as if she were my sites."

"If I could see her your wife, my by, I should follow for all I have done for you, three you was terminately and orphum and friendles, as my ('Di wall seemble Send for the priest, children, and make it and

Philip was silent; his comin, to, we are just to

"Don't you see I'm going !- to you want : ...

"I premise to be a brother to Virginia-to care for her as a she were my own, uncle. Is not that enough?"

"No-no-no!" fretted the dying man, who, having been unre conalls and exacting all his life, could not change his nature at the hour of death.

Distressed and uncertain what to do, tempted by the force of circumstances, Philip wavered; but the moment when his promise would have given his uncle any satisfaction had passed—the awful change was upon his face, the sweat upon his trow, the rattle in his throat.

"O, my father!" sobbed Virginia, sinking upon her knees and flinging her arms over the heart which had ceased to beat.

The gray morning broke over her as she wept wildly besile the lead. Philip was oblized to draw her away from the rean by force, while others came to attend upon the dead. To see her so given up to grief, so desolate, with no one but him his by whom she could turn, touched him with pity and tenderness.

"Weep, if you will, poor girl, it will be better than choking back all the tears. Weep in my arms, for I am your brother now," he said, very gently, as he seated her upon a soft and drew her head to his shoulder, soothing her and quieting her excess of emotion, until, from fatigue and exhaustion, she are yet askep on his bosom.

"How lovely she is, with her arrogance and vanity all to it I away by some real sorrow," he thought, as he laid her car fally upon the pillow, and went out to give directions to the district I household.

During the next week Philip made himself of use to all, o, racing, quietly directing and controlling every thing; and when the funeral was over, the outer excitement subsided, and cathing left but that enginess and shadow of the house from which the dead has recently been berne, then he had to contain with the erglan girl what should be done for the future.

"Will you stry where you are for the summer, while I go it is and attend to my affirs at the West? If you will, I can also back a win in the autumn, and we can then decide up a me settled plan for the fature."

"I can stay here, if you think hest. But it seems to me as if I shall go wild with fear and loneliness in this great house, with no one but the servants, after you are gone. I don't know what to do, Philip."

"Is there no friend of your own sex who would be comfort and company, whom you could invite to stay with you till I come back? You will not wish to go into town this weather. Besides, my dear girl, I must tell you that the town-house will not be long in your hands. When the estate is settled up, this property here, and a small annuity possibly, will be all that I can save for you. Will it not be best for you to break up, dismiss the expensive array of servants, rent your house, and board in some agreeable family?"

"Oh, Philip, I don't know. I can't think and I can't decide.
I know nothing of business. I wish you to do every thing for me;" her helplessness appealed to him strongly.

She could only think of one way with which she should be happy and content; but he did not propose that way.

"I can only suggest this, then, for the present: stay where you are now until I go home and arrange matters there. I must go home for a few weeks. In the mean time the affairs of the estate will be closing up. When I return, I will see to them; and when all is settled, if you wish to go to the West with me, you shall go. If I have a home by that time, you shall share it."

"How share it, Philip?"

He did not reply. He was resolved to see Alice Wilde again, to satisfy himself her character was all he had dreamed it—her love what he hoped; if so, nothing should tempt him from the fulfillment of the sweet promise he had made nimedf and her—neither gratitude to the dead nor sympathy with the living.

CHAPTER X.

RECONCILIATION.

ALICE WILDE had been taught by her father to "read, write, and cipher," and was not ignorant of the rudiments of some of the sciences; for, curiously enough, considering surrounding circumstances, there was quite a little library of books at the cabin-home, and some old-fashioned school-books among the number. If, when she first went into the seminary at Center City, some of the young ladies were disposed to rilleule her extreme ignorance upon some matters, they would by surprised by superior knowledge upon others; and finally were content to let her assert her own individuality, and be, what she was—a puzzle; a charming puzzle, too, for her hin lness and sweetness made her beauty so irresistible that they could look upon it without envy. Another thing which In high ler al my both with teachers and pupils was the excel-I are of her wardrole and her lavish supply of pocket money, for it is telerably well known that the glitter of gold conceals a great many blemisles. Before the first term was over she was the praise, the wender, and the pet of the school; flying run racif her great bounty and her romantic "belongines" Lariant even winged their way over the pickets which sertin led the seminary group be, and wandered into the city.

The evening that Philip Moore reached home, after his centern journey, chancel to be the same as that upon which the seminary began its annual exhibition, previous to closing the long August heliday. He would not have thought of the long August heliday. He would not have thought of attending any thing so tiresome; but, taking ten with his attending any thing so tiresome; but, taking ten with his attending any them, whose pretty wife was going and urged him to acquire my them, he was persuaded against his inclination.

As you are alr ally spoken of for mayor, Raymond, and as I am one of the city fathers, I suppose we must show a lacining interest in all the various 'institutions' which do honor to our rising town," laughed Philip, as he consented to attend with his friends.

"I will be very encouraging, especially to the young lall a, o see your wise and venerable countenance beaming up in them," remarked Raymond.

"But really, Mr. Moore, there's somebody there worth seeing, I'm told—somebody quite above the average of the ribbon and white-muslin beauty. I've heard all kinds of romantic stories about her, but I haven't seen her yet," chatted the young wife. "She's the daughter of a fish rman, I be lieve, who's grown enormously rich selling salm m and white-fish, and who's very proud of her. Or clse she's an Indian princess whose father dug up a crock of buriet gell—or something out of the common way, nobody knows just what"

Philip's heart gave a great bound. "Could it be?" he asked himself. "No—hardly—and yet"—he was now as anylone to, be "bored" by the stupid exhibition as he had himself been to escape it.

They took seats early in the hall, and hall him to lok about them. Philip bowed to acquaintances here and there, After a time he began to feel unpleasantly constituted is me apell fastening upon him-some other inthe no than his own will magnetizing his thoughts and movements, until he was compelled to look toward a remote part of the ram, where, in the shadow of a pillar, he saw two burning eves flx I up n him. The face was so much in the shale that he call not distinguish it for some time; but the eyes, glowing and storly as those of a rattlesnake, seemed to pierce him through and transfix him. He looked away, and tried to appear in his runt, yet his own eyes would keep wan bring back to the singular and disagreeable ones. At last he made out the face: It was that of the young man who had brought him d was train Will's mill the last autumn. What was Ben Perhits Alice in such a place as this? He because to feel certain who time mysterious pupil was.

"yet I believe I would rather the would have her be it just as unsophisticated as she was, until she here it world under my tutelage."

Young ladies came on to the stage, there was a series reading-but Philip was deaf, for she was not amid the graceful throng.

At last she came. His own timid wild-flower, his fawn of the forest, stole out into the presence of all those eyes. A murmur of admiration could be heard throughout the hall. She Uhshe I, yet she was self-possessed. Philip gazed at her in astenishment. Her dress, of the richest blue silk, the flowers on her breast and in her hair, the boy, the step, the line le personal adornments, were all a la mode. His woodland sylph had been transformed into a modern young lady. He was almost displeased-and yet she was so supremely fair, si in a queen amid the others, that she looked more lovely tion ever. He wondered if everybody had been teaching her low t autiful she was. There was nothing of coquetry or vanity in her looks-but a pride, cold and starry, which was entirely new to her.

He termed to look at Ben Perkins, who had leaned forward into the light so that his face was plainly visible; and the signifiens he had often entertained that the youth loved Alice wire contirmed by his expression at that moment.

"Poor by! how can be help it?" thought the proud and halpy gentleman, regarding the untaught lumberman with-a Mind of generous compassion. He now saw that Mr. Wilde was sitting by B m's side, his heart and eyes also fixed upon the stage.

"I've son that face before," whispered Mr. Raymond; "Where was it? Ah, I remember it well, now. I can tell You who she is, Philip. She's the daughter of Captain Wilde, il. .t quer customer of ours, who halls from the upper country. Sir a al rion, r. marka'le girl! By the way, Phil., did you firminh ir? Beause I've a message for you. Capt. Wilde till me to inform you that if you ever set foot on his premises in he should consider hims If at liberty to shoot you."

"Flirt with her! let me tell you, Raymond, I'm engaged ! . l. r, and intend to marry her just as soon as I can persuade I. r to set a day. I love her as deeply as I henor her. There's a mething gene wreng, somewhere, or her father tion, but he does not threaten Belithy. They could not have received my letters."

"I presume I made part of the mischief mysell," confessed Raymond, "for almost the first thing I told them when hey entered my store this spring, was, that you had gene off to marry your elegant cousin. You needn't look so provehed, Phil.; I told them in good faith. You used to love Virginia in the days when you confided in me; and if you'd have kept up your confidence, as you should, I would have been posted, and could have given your friends all the information they were in search of. Don't you see 'twas your own fault?"

"I suppose it was," replied Philip, with a smile, but still feeling uneasy, and oh, how intensely anxious to get where he could whisper explanations to the heart, which he now saw, had suffered more in his absence than he could have dreamed. Henceforth his eyes were fixed only upon Alice. Some shapercoived him; as their eyes met, she grow pale for a moment, and then went on with her part more calmly than ever. To him, it seemed as if they both were acting a part; as if they had no business in that hour, to be anywhere but by e. in other's side; he did not even know what share she had in the performances, except that once she saw, and her wine, f.M, sweet, melanchely, the expression of the loves ag she was singing, seemed to be asking of him why he had been so crude to her.

The two hours of the exercises drawed by. The police arose to go; Philip crowded forward toward the start, his Alice had disappeared. He linguist, and presently, who site thought the hall was vacated, she came both to so if her father had waited to speak with her. He was there; either parties were scattered about, relatives of the pupils, who wished to speak with them or compatchate them. She did not so him, but hurried down the aide to where her father and the were standing. She locked puls and the real the police had gone out of her air as the color had gone extent of her cheek.

"Alice! dear Alice!" exclaime! Phillip, printing to her

Instantly she turned toward him with hourity calmin. is.

"Mr. Meore. Allow me to contribute you. We that your bride setting by your site during the exercise."

"That was Mrs. Raymon', my parte i's with But what a strange question for you to ask, Alice. I supposed you had consented to take that name, if ever any one. Mr. Wilde, I received your message through Mr. Raymond, but I knew you were thee too sincere a friend of mine, and are always too Longrable a man, to refuse me a chance of explanation."

"Say your say," was the raftsman's curt reply.

"You need not speak one word, Philip. It is I who ought to ber your forgiveness, that I have wronged you by doubting you. Love-oh, love, should never doubt-never be deceived!" exclaimed Alice.

"It would have taken much to have disturbed my faith in you; Alice."

"Because I had every motive for loving you; while youyen had pride, prejudice, rank, fashion, every thing to struggle a rainst in choesing me."

"In let !!" cried Philip. "Yes, every thing, to be sure!" and he cast such an expressive glance over her youthful lovelines that she blushed with the delicious consciousness of her own charms. "Old, ugly, awkward, and ignorant, how ash med I shall be of my wife!"

"But, Phillip!" her tearful eyes, with the smiles flashing three the them, made the rest of her excuses for her.

Halling her hand, which was all the caress the presence of sir mars would permit, Philip turned to the raftsman.

"I taked you i'r your day hier's hand, in the letter which I said you can the return of the young man who brought me them your home, but autumn, since your stallen change of Hans presented my a king you in person. I have not yet had your answer."

When he said "I tter" Alice's eyes turned to Ben, who had ton star ling within herring all this time; he met her ques-their look now with one of stublers despair.

"Yeu gave us no letters, B n."

Philip also turns i, and the anary bid into his face. "INDING I telliver the letters I sent by you, your man?"

"Ha! had had my, by thun br, I didn't! Did you think town was such a field as to help post the builter a med his Dwn is let I didn't give the buters, but I told all the lies I Californ by the Philip More. You englit to be a deal terminating that The grade actuals. Let use tell you that!" and scowling at the party, he strode away into the night.

"He ought to be arrested-he is a dangerous fellow," said

Mr. Wilde, looking after him uneasily.

"I am sorry for him," said Philip, "but that can do him no good." -

"Look out for him, Philip; you can not be to wary—he will kill you if he gets a chance. Oh, how much treath that desperate boy has given me. I can not be happy while I know he is about."

"Thar', thar', child, don't you go to getting nervers again. We'll take care of Ben. Don't you treable your head at ut him."

"If you could guess what I have suffered this wint I put," whispered Alice, pressing closer to her lover.

"My poor little forest-fawn," he murmured. "But we must stop talking here; eavesdroppers are guthering about I suppose this ogre of a seminary will shut you up tenicht; but where shall I see you to-morrow, and how early? I have yet to explain my abonce to you and your father—and I imported, the segret to talk of the fature as well as the past."

"Meet us at the Hotel Washinston, at my ran," replied Mr. Wille, speaking for her. "We will be the restrict o'clock in the morning. And now good-night, parallel to did bravely to-night. I'm going to be Parallel to be a contract.

you needn't dream of accilents."

Alice kised her father good high. The show it is this his companion too, and that he wanted to have into exist at from the line ring to his of both; but project will be oking ashance at them, and their relationship has a fill obliged to part.

That night the store of Rayman like Morre was list of a be on fire; the flames were making rapid hardway was a conclusion was given; it was the hear of middle who as paid on local, but the alarm speed, and persons were the city and retained and win lows in two minutes.

" Does any one shop in the store?" show it is

"Yesi yes! young Macre him-It- be here a reaction in

Why don't he come out then? Hell in the land Burst in the doors. Let us no what has har,

"The fire seems to come from that part of the building.

He will surely perish."

The crowd shouted, screamed, battered the doors in wild exitement—some ran round to the back, and a ladder was plead at the window of his room, which was in the second stery. Light shone from that room. David Wilde, whose held was not far distant, mingling with others who rushed cut at the alarm, as is the custom in provincial towns, was the first to place his foot upon the ladder; his strength was great, and he broke in the sash with a stroke of his fist, leaped into the building, appearing in a moment with the young man, whom he handed down to the firemen clambering up the ladder after him.

"He's nigh about sufficiented with the smoke—that's all. D. h water on him, and he'll be all right presently," he cried to those who pressed about. "It's that Ben, I know—cuss me, it I don't believe the boy's crazy," he muttered to himself.

Philip soon shock off the stupor which had so nearly result in the most horrible of deaths, and was able to help others in rescuing his property. The fire was not under without much less to the building, though its contents suffered from sacks and water. The young firm was not discouraged by this, as all less was covered by insurance; they had the less also of a busy time "getting to rights" again, but that was the worst.

It was apparent, upon examination, that the fire was the was a far incondiary; Philip felt, in his heart, what the guilty intent a was, and shull-red at his narrow escape. It was deal to him and Mr. Wille to put the authorities upon the lit per track; but the perpetrator had field, and no clae could be get to him in the city. Mr. Wilde at once suspected he had me up the river, and foling that they should have no built he was apprehended, and not knowing what miscondial he might do at the milk he to k the sheriff with him and the lift home, having Albe, for the present, at the school with permissions of the principal to see her friends when the case, as it was now vacation. Before he left there was a factor. It had a between the three—Philip, Alice, and her faller. Philip explained his absince. As he went on to speak of Mortimer Moore and his daughter, of his death, the troubled state of the family affairs, etc., the railsman betalved a keener interest than his connection with these affairs would seem to warrant.

"Poor Virginia! she is all alone, and she is your tousing Philip," said Alice.

"She tried hard to get back her old power over me, Alke. You must beware how you compassionate her to much. But when we are married, and have a home of our own, we will share it with her, if you consent. I've no doubt size can find somebody worthy of her, even in this savage West, as size thinks it. And, by the way, I think we carllet to get a home of our own as soon as possible, in order to have a shifter to offer my cousin—don't you, Alice?"

"She's tongue-tied. Girls always lose their tengues when they need 'em the most."

"Now, father, I should think you might answer for me," said Alice, trying to raise her eyes, but blashes and condicion would get the better of her, and she took refuse in her not ther's lap.

"Well, puss, I s'pose you want to go to sele il ilve er six years yet—tell him you've made your cachlations to he p in school till you're twenty-two."

"School! I'll be your teacher." said Phillip.

"Choose for yourself, puss. I sippe the some process off yer old father, the better you'll like it."

"I shan't shake you off, father. Neither shall I have you alone up there in the woods. That must remost be seed of the start. I shall never marry, father, to dearty of the uncreateful child."

"Suppose we arrange it this way then. We will has with your father in the summer, and he shall live with as in the winter. I don't want a prettier place than While's mail to spend my summers in."

"Oh, that will be delightful," excluin I the print girl; and then she blushed more deeply than ever at having the trayed her pleasure.

"Then don't keep me in suspense any later, but tell me if you will get ready to go back to New York with me in the latter part of September. We will be gone but a few weeks.

and can be settled in the new mansion I've given orders for, before the winter is here. Shall it be so?"

"Say 'yes,' cubbie, and done with it, as long as you don't intend to say 'no.' I see she wants to say 'yes,' Mr. Moore, and since it's got to be, the sooner the suspense is over, the letter I'll like it;" and with a great sigh, the raftsman kissed the forchead of his child and put her hand in that of Philip. With that act he had given away to another the most cherished of his possessions. But children never realize the pany which ren's the parent heart, when they leave the parent n st and fly to new bowers. "All I shall be good for now, will be to keep you in spending-money, I s'pose. You're going to marry a fishionable young man, you know, cubbie, and he'll want you tricked out in the last style. How much can you spend before I get back?" and he rulled his leather man y-bay out of his pocket.

"I haven't the least idea, father."

"Sire enough, you haven't. You'll have to keep count of the dilars, when you get her, Mr. Moore; for never having been in billy din the pastime of her sex, going a-shopping, sho won't know whether she ought to spend ten dollars or a hundred. Like as not, she'll get a passion for the pretty amusement, to pay for having been kept back in her infancy. You'd better get some of your women friends to go 'long with you, pass. Here's, then, for the beginning." He poured a han Itulier more of gold into her lap.

"Nay, Mr. Wille, you need not indulge her in any thing by all your means, upon my account, for—although she may have to conform to more modern fashions, as she has already dine, since moving among others who do—she will never look so byely to me in any other dress, as in those quaint, oldfashi a 1 on 3 she were when I learned to love her. And All a, whatever other pretty things you buy or make, I request in a continue made precisely like that you Were last summer-will you?"

The reference heard, two or three times, on his way up the river, from become whom he halled, of Ben's having been sent a little way about of him, and he, with the sheriff, had little doubt but they should capture him immediately upon their arrival at Wille's will. But upon reaching their destination they could not find him. The men had seen him hovering about the mill, and Pallas had given him his dinner only a few hours before, when he cause to the house, holding, as she said, "like a hongry will had, snatching what I give him and trotting off to do woods acin."

Help was summoned from the mill and the woods of the little woods of the facilities could be discovered. They kept up the search for a week, when the sheriff was of lit I to return. David Wille wich I to believe, with the efficient that Ben had fled the country and give off to distant parts; but he could not persuade himself to that effect. He still this as if the unseen enemy was somewhere near. However, nothing further could be done; so cauth ming the house sevents to keep a good watch over the premises, and the mill-hands to see that the property was not fired at highly or other mischief done, he returned for his daughter.

"Give Pallas this new dress to be made up for the course n, and tell her to be swift in her preparations, for the time is short. It will be a month, Alice, tellor I say you seem—a whole, long month—and then I hope for no more partiags. I shall bring Mr. and Mrs. Raymond to the welling, with your permission," said Philip, with other partiag words, with being whispered we can not relate, as he placed her on the said-boat, well laden down with horse and but a nationing the necessary "dry-goods and grown is "in the fite.

"We'll charter a steam-tug next time," growled the rais-

CHAPTER XI.

A MEETING IN THE WOODS.

Pallas was in "her elements." There's nothing a genuine cook likes so well as to be given cirtle blandly for a weldire. If the Wild's had invited a hundred grosts to step with them a fertnicht, she would hardly have increased the memory of her preparations. No wonder the old soul was her y in the preparations. No wonder the old soul was her y in the preparations as in the promise that she was to go with her and take the culinary department of the new hand the little charge.

"We's rin' to lib s n what' de clo'es mesa gives us'll in the same of Samuella, Samuella, We can go to media' ence norte the best of the quality should. An' de hour 'll be bran new, and I'm to keep de heys of all de de ts my !!and your miles will set at the health do to be will pleasy of the as my mines have all is dem. An' you'll have to buy a very pride about your, and not cler bin's slorgy. Note that her and the security to the second as as well in the feet in the du berry family. New, Saturn, du't you be me cotch you could be cather a six the cur, 'can a I want 'em all for cui.". M. renight trained to twenty design which and mark or art. I went every our dem pullets has An'you bel-'eta claidens up grad and fat an' den will turkeys in da in. District a hal country for a cont, arter all. I've hard r thin'mp, an' I fall we can have will turkey and ler The same of the property of th the handery that them do practy steres a purely i. it. Whirl dat car n new? Saturn, has you been a dat citron? Laws, I cotch you in det, you'll nel ber forget a dat citron? Laws, I cotch you in dat, you'll nel ber forget to dat citron? Laws, I cotch you in dat, you'll nel ber forget to dat citron? I have a few raises for me, you get halt of 'em up to carp a few raises for me a few raises fo

Poor Saturn had to "fly round" more than was agreeable to his temperament; but he contrived to keep up his strength and his spirits upon stolen sweets, and he tried to be excessively useful.

"Wall, wall, his arpetite does beat all; he's gettin' ole and childish, my nigger is, and I s'pose I mus' humor him a little. His heart is set on de good tings ob dis worl'. I'se 'fraid he'll hate to gib up eatin' and sleepin' when he comes to die. Dur ain't no eatin' and drinkin' thar, Saturn; no marryin' nor givin' in marriage."

"Wha' for? is catin' wicked, Pallas?"

"Not on dis yearth, where it is a necessary evil. But dur-dar's better tings. We'll sing dar, Saturn," she continued, anxious to rekindle the religious arder which she was fearful of cooling by her picture of the purely spiritual phasures of the next world. "We'll set under de tree obdiff, by side de beautiful ribber, and sing all de hymns and pedans;" and she struck up, in a voice of rich melody,

"O Canaan, my happy home, Oh, how I I mg is thee!"

while her husban I joined in the strain with equal fire r.

Alice loved to hear them singing at their world; not only because of their musical voices, but the eathering the joy and expectation swelling through them, awakened her can young soul to hope and prayer.

A happier face than hers, as she sat in the little parlot, sewing upon the welling-garments, it would be difficult to find—a kind of intense radiance from the utter content and love within shone through her feature. When a year parlot is about to marry the man she loves, with the following the of her judgment and considered, the constitute for the and friends, when her heart is full of hers, when she like and solitorie at her own happy thoughts, as she sits printing upon rich and delicate fabries which are to other her beauty in his eyes, then she experiences the most like in the life.

The sunshing of promise rated to a tile. All its delightful a tivity was pervelably thank for interest And yet there was a shadow—a light challer, which as thus would darken and again entirely disappear. It was the dread of Ben. The men at the mill reported having caught glimpses of some one whom they were quite sure was him, at different times, in different lonely places in the forest.

Saturn came in, one day, with the whites of his eyes of frightful direumference, averring that a ghost had run after Lim in the woods. What could be the purpose of a person this hovering about in concealment? surely nothing good Alice was not herself, personally, much afraid. She did not think Ben would harm her, but she felt that he was hanging al-ut, that his eyes watched every preparation, that he would know when Philip came, and she was afraid he would have are ther of portunity to attempt his life. The courage what wentl not quail on the battle-field will fail before a secret and unknown cvil. Even the raftsman, brave and powerful as ne was, filt that uneasiness which springs from such a source. Many a time he went out with his ritle on his shoulder, reselved that if he met with the wretched and desperate youth, he would deal with him severely. His search was always in vain. Alice gave up all her rambles, much as she longed to get again into the heart of the whispering pine-firest.

One aftern on, when her father was at the mill, and Pallas, as usual, busy in the hischen, as she sat sewing and singler to her lifting how voice, the bright room so blenly grow durk, and holing up at the open window, she saw Benstanding there rading at her. It she had not known of his vicinity, she we like the recognized him at the first glance; his face we is hargard, his eyes the labor, his hair long and tangled, his clothing soiled and worn.

him, in a veloce so hollow that it checked the cry rising to her like "I ala't going to harm you. I wouldn't harm a hair to your head-not to save the neck yer so anxious to see her beginn the rollows. I know where your father is, and I just on it up to have a look at you. You look happy and that it, All will be See me! how do you like your took of your the It is not may work, Box, and you know it. Do not blame the I pity you; I proy for you. But do go away from here—do go! I would rather you would harm me than from this spot—leave me to my happiness, and try and he happy yourself. Be a min. Go, Ben—I thus alone. If you do not go, you will certainly be taken by others, and perhaps punished."

Catch a weasel asleep, but you can't cut have. You next put twenty men on the watch. How p'e and it must be to you to sit here making your welding-clothes; I think of it nights, as I lay on the hemlock boughs, with my eyes will open, staring up at the stars. What's that sing I used to like to hear you sing so well, Alice?

For a soul so warm and true;
And she's gone to the lake of the Dismal Swarp,
Where, all night long, by the the-fly lamp,
She paddles her light can e."

The maiden shullered to her leart's core as his voice rose will and mournful in the sweet tune to which the bulled was set. "Ha! ha! Alice, it's the same little can be that you used to come up to the mill in so often, in the plant old times—

"And her Are-fly lamp I soon shall hear;
Her paddle I soon shall hear;
Long and loving our life shall be,
And I'll hide the maid in a cypress tree.
When the first step of dealer is near."

Alice seemed to be listening to her own dire;

Away to the Dismal Swamp has part is —
His path was rear land and:
Through tangled party or, he is after is,
Through many a ten, where the sequent focis,
And man never treat before?"— and with an unearthly shrink he hamble I away through the garden and into the woods, leaving Allers over and that Pallas, who had been attracted to the deriver by the structure voice, brought her the "camilre" bettle to reter her.

"He's a ravin' matrix, that poor by is, my claim He ought to be cotched and put in de 'sylam at on the relies done. Mercy, chile, I was just goin' to take down de ride. 'Yen' my pickaniany. I was 'fraid he'd t'ar you all to promite a ragin' wild beas'."

"You wouldn't have had courage to fire, would you? I'm

"In course I should have had courage. Shows I'd stan' by and so my chile total off into the woods by a madman? Task! even a healft fight for her chickens. Ef I hadn't a ride, I'd spring on 'em, tooth and nail, of he laid a hand on my chile;" and the old negro woman breathed hard, holding there if erect, and looking so determined, that she inspired courage in the one who regarded her.

"Tien I shall choose you for my body-guard," said Alim, "for I begin to feel like a poor little chick in a big field, with an unseen hawk in the air which might pounce on it at any time. Oh, Pallas, didn't he book fearful?"

"Awful, mi-sus, awful! We can't be too kerful of a function—and poor Ben's got to be one, sure 'nutil." Poor But a y ar ago he was as merry a young pusson as destyere obseques car' for to see; and so willin' and kind, allers lookin' cut to do a little sarvice, bringin' us gome and herries, and makin' us furnitur' and fixin's about de house,—really to work all day, jus' to hab you say, 'Tank you, Ben,' or gib him one smile. I jus' wish dis wellin' was sub ober. I has a sense as suthin' is goin' to happen. And you know, chile, when ole Pallus has a sense, it allers comes to suthin'."

"Den't tell me of it, if you have, Pallas, for I'm nervous to tell already. There comes father now. I feel safe when les is a con."

Upon hearing her account of Ben's looks and words, the national resolved more firmly than ever to take him into east alg if possible. Leaving Palles, who was a better man than her hashand, with a double-barrol digun, to diffind the hear, if necessary, in their absence, he summent hears without two and hemt I the woods for twenty-four hears without so and hemt I the woods for twenty-four hears without so and hent I the woods for twenty-four hears without so and hent I the woods for twenty-four hears without to a not her all velocity eight hears by two others, and to he pup the watch, on double wares, day and night, to he pup the watch, on double wares, day and night, to he pup the watch, on double wares, day and night,

On the third day of his watch, one of the new, while standing by the mark not not not, eating his lanch, his ritle leading against the rails beside him, was said only knocked down, and by the time he got upon his feet again, he saw Ben Perkins

The news of this mishap was any thing but encouraging, for the chances of his doing mischief were increased tenfillly the fact of his having possession of a locked gran. Yet Alexang and sewed, praying silently to Heaven that all might be well, and, happy in the faith and hope of youth, went on with her preparations; and Pallas finished shelves fall of the lacke and other niceties; and Saturn hewell wood and brought water, receiving his reward as he went, from his wife's her volent hand; and Mr. Wilde was alert and vigilant, really for all emergencies.

It was now near the mildle of September; the black or were gone; and the grapes were yet green and unjuditable. Pullus was in want of wild-plums to pickle, and of wild-mint to flavor some of the dressings for dishes yet to be cooked. She set forth into the woods, having no occasion for promal flars, and not finding what she desired, wand religible started, with a—"Hill hill what's this?"

"If you've any thing in that basket a starving man can cat, give it to me." It was Ben Perkins who spake, ir in a lating a fallen tree, where he was crouching, litting his emachated face to her view.

"I hab nothin' at all; and of I had, why should I gib it to you, when you'se makin' us all do trouble you can't

"You've turned a minut me, too, Aunt Paller," lessels, in so hopeles a tone, that she paused from her parpose for the gaway as flat as she could. "I've done yet many the rain days gone by; I've never referred to be a yet a height here, and I've never done nothin' to injure year; but yet, to the and try to get me on to the gallows. Go and tall can where I am, if you want to. I don't know as I've structle to away any longer. It's a week some any thing has pained by lips but a nest full of bird's-ergs I climbed up the regardly. Say, won't you bring me a piece of track?"

"You go home will me, and believe year-lift and years all hab all de bread you want. Notoly's starting year but your self"

"Ha! ha! you're a cute 'un, sin't you now! I don't think I shall put my foot into that trap."

"Well, den, you gib me dat gun what you've got thar'. Gib me dat gun and I'll bring you suthin' to eat, and won't tell where you are."

"No-no! you can't come that game."

You doen't s'pose I'd bring you any ting to eat or help up you alive, when you're tryin' yer bes' to kill my masser's frien's, do ye? It's you is foolish, Ben. What for you be so by!, so wicke I for, Ben? You use to be a nice boy. I like you berry much a year ago. I can't bar' to see you hurtin' yers It'so—let alone odders. Come, now, yer gib me back dat run, an' ac' like a man 'stid of a wil' beas', and I'll do all I can fir you, sartain sure, Ben."

"Palles, I tell you, I'm starving. I want somethin' to cat Let that gim alone. I swear to you, I won't use it on any of your family. I wouldn't hurt a hair of Alice's head—nor her taller's. But I want that rifle—it's none of your business why. Won't ye give me suthin' to cat, for the sake of old times, Pallas ?"

That mis rable, hungry, besecching look-how could she refuse it?

"Yea've acted like a crazy man, Ben, and you've done brry wrong to yours if as well as o'llers. I can't help you, is you promise to do better. Gib me dat gun, and, take yer Bill's eath you'll never try to hurt him that's to be Miss Alle 's husband, an' Pil help you all I can."

"Why should I promise not to harm him? hasn't he done all he could to injure me? hadn't I ought to kill him if I can? we allow it to right and justifiable for me to take his heart's him I?—as he's taken mine, but in a different way. I was a heart's, poor, hard-workin' young men, with nuthin' but my hands to rely on. I hadn't no education, I hadn't no he way, but I loved the captain's daughter—I worship dherehalow. She'd have been mine—I know she would—if he hadn't come along and got her away from me. He, who had every thing, came and robbed me of the only thing I cared to have. He is this clustion and his money and his time was to stall a yearly here. As soon as he come hangin't and I was nothed—Mis Alice walked right over me to get in his arms. I tall yo, that men has robbed me and wronged."

"You is wuss den crazy, Ben Perkins; and I'll tell ye de trute, if ye get as mad as threat me for it. 'Thin't noways bleely my missus would ober ave taken up wid ye, if Philip More had neber som her. She's a hely, torn and brod; she come of a high family—and it was in her blook. Some a limit neber have taken up will you. She likel you, and we all like i you; but she wouldn't a married yeu. Yeu'd no bus ment to spect she would. It's you is all de wrent. Den when a young man what is suitable to her come along, and can't no more help fallin' in love will her sweet fice din you can, when he loves her, and wants to marry her, and she loves him, as she naturally would, you get wicked and ugly, and want to kill him. His, man! you don't love her! His you did, you couldn't neber breek her heart, killing her heat and as is to be. What would you gain by it? Still of Hill and pityin' you, she'd shuller to hear your name, and she'd will away and die, and you'd be her murders, well as bla live shame! call dat love? Why, of you red'y loved her, you! try to make her happy, and so in' you couldn't hab how, you'd be glad she get de man she like !-- Yet is a lad !-- w. Ben Perkins, and you just show how hader it in Miss Al didn't take up wid you."

"Stethinks I'm soled, too, den't de? -de, yes, de are she must; she must hat ma, and with me doub. I have wit, best I combined to by it. Oh, Puller, toll har not to think to bear t of me. I was never well breakt up. I'd only my will presims to mails me. I've due wrong ould be are by heart was so set men her. Yet I've strucked be in the inter-I've tried to with she could be him with it to. Teller, when I was on the river along with P., p March I might have put him out of the way, but for her sain I we had in it. Often and eiten as we sat to the in that him beat al and on the water, the deall in my heart at meet to struck him and throw him overboard. I don't have may I delicate to it, 'employ' it seemed as it All is a particular to the and an alter's less man des lit. Once and the land of the led on his arm, and I was built our birdens. - the bard and on his throat, who a six took ball of me and hall me in a I seem ber as phin as I say 1 1. W. Sail to a since White dress, and her beir was situated to an her sealing and her feet was bare. She looked at me so-I couldn't stand it; and I made up my mind never to lay hands on that per son again. And I felt so much more like a man, I could look her straight in the face agin, when I got back. But I tois! list, and tried to get in her good graces. Do you think that was so very bud, under the circumstances, Aunt Pallis? I never meant to do nuthin' worse; but when I seen all my plans knocked in the head, and that person meeting her agin and making up, and she lookin' so like an angel, and so proud and harry, and all of 'em casting scornful eyes on me, the d vil br ke out again worse 'an ever, and I set fire to Philip More's stre, hepin' to burn him up; and since then I've len a'mit as deprate as a man ever gets to be. Part the time I'm as good as crazy, I think such thoughts out here in the weeds abne-and agia I'm quite cool and reflect all over un bel con luct. I'd take it all back, if I could, for her sake;" and he burst out weeping.

"Yer poor, misable soul, I pity you. But I mus' say you d'il wrong. 'Tain't too late to repent and be saved. Gib up all does will, where I feelin's, be resigned to de will ob Provider with his soult low of your having the girl you happen to love fast. 'Tuin't for us to hab all we want in dis yere werl. 'Tain't for us to revenue cur en mics. Chris' says do not to dom dut depictfully use yer. And nobody has used not be in de will be had bein' you has, you had prayed to de horly bein' de without bein' you has, you had prayed to de horly is to sake yer from temptation, and since yer couldn't be hadin't be had a late only in distiff, to make yer good, yer wouldn't be hadin't had a state. People has had troubles fore yer. Don't tink yer do only one, poor hoy. Dur's plenty of tears for Chris' to wip a away on dis yearth."

"I den't know nuthin about it. I've never been taught "Thin't not rul i'r a men to love his enemies. I con't do it. But it I the ught you'd pity me and pray for me—it' I thought Mis Alba would pray for me, I'd give up wicked thoughts, and try to govern myself."

"Should a pray for yer, Ibn, will all her heart every time "Should a pray for yer, Ibn, will all her heart every time. She'd the pray a live son her cry a out yer many time. She'd gib her right health a haby a more land happy. Masser's sorry for yer, too; he tought so make i yeu once; but cauree he can't let you kill his friends. Come, now, Bon, you promise to do right, and I'll stan' by yer tru thick and thin."

"Some of the time I'm good, and agin I'm bal. I didn't use to be so. It's only wretchedness has made mass ugly. I don't know how to try to be better."

"May I pray for you, Ben."

"Yes-if you want to be such a fool," he sail, religionally.

The good old colored woman went down on her knees there upon the mossy cushion of the earth, pouring out her soul in prayer for the hargard being, who sat, with his chin in his hands, listening to her appeal in his lightly. These streamed down her cheeks; the carnestness, the path's of her sincere petitions to that great Father whom she's and to believe had power to comfort and take care of him and all pt him as a child, touched his lonely, sullen, minuther ple nature—his sobs accompanied her "Amen!"

"I shoul la't be such a baby as to cry," he sail, when she had finished, "if I wasn't so weak; but when a fillow's first I a week he ain't none of the brave t. I thank you, the will, for your prayer, Aunt Pallas—I'll remember it to my dy'n' day. Here's the gun—take it. P'raps if I keep it an hear heart, I'll want to do some mischief with it. Take it, while you can get it; and bring me some food, as you promise. If you break your promise, and bring them men here to take here. I shan't never have no faith in prayers. If you want to make a Christian of me, you mus'n't fool me."

"Neither will I," said Pallas; "I'll be back here in an hear will breed and meat. You'd better make up your mind, by that time, to go home will me, gib yers if up to make r, and but him do as he feels is lest will yer. He'll not for do bed, in sur."

She took the gun and histened off which is, all the constant means of harm away from him. She was firmly read to be a break her promise to him, much as shed in the last he might be put in safe quarters, and this une had make the put in safe quarters, and this une had make the put in safe quarters, and this une had make the good that it is a constant be done away with. As he had confirmed him his moods, she did not rely much up a his prosent one. Reaching home, she stowed the rifle away, exing nothing about it, and filling her backet with solutional field, the returned to the appointed spate. To her sarpels, then was not there. She waited a few minutes, but he did not come

"I can't bar to know a human critter is starving to def," she muttered, setting the basket in a branch of the fallen tree. "I'll leave dis here—and now I've kep' my promise I'll go straight home and tell masser all 'bout it, and he can take sech steps as he tinks bes'."

She gave a graphic account of the whole interview to the raftsman as soon as he came in to tea. When she came to that part of his confession where he spoke of being about to chake Philip, while on the river, Alice turned pale, saying with a shudder—as she recalled one of those visions which haunt d her dreams during that terrible period of the journey of her lover with his deadly enemy:

"Yes! yes! I dil—but it was in a dream. I beheld the skiif gilling along in the starlight, Philip sleeping, his arm un! r his hea!, and his carpet-bag for a pillow; Ben was stooping over him, his face was white as ashes, his teeth were clenche!, his hands were creeping toward Philip's throat—I sprang upon him—I held his hands—I drew him back—I screame!—and the scream awoke me, and father rushed into my room to see what was the matter. You ridiculed my higher respectively.

"Poor boy," said the raftsman, wiping a tear from his check, when his servant had concluded her relation. "I'm right down serry for the lad. And when you are married and out of the way, pass, I'll take him in hand, and try and reclaim him. He'll make a man yet."

"He sin't to blame for his faults, seeing he's never had no specific register up. I'll teach him the New Testament doctrices of he'll only let me, once Miss Alice is 'way," remarked Pailes.

Mr. Will be went to the spot indicated by Pallas—the basket of food had been taken away, but no one was in the vicinity.

CHAPTER XII.

PANILY AFFAIRS.

Ir was the day before the welling. The house was in order, to the full satisfaction of the sable has keeper. Viands, worthy of the occasion, filled the starter or to overflowing. Philip, with his suite, including the minist rank was to efficiate, was expected to arrive by supporting. The last touches were given to the arrangements, and Alice was dressed to receive her guests, by the middle of the after an The motherly heart of her old nurse was some said in her, that she came very near making fitted middles in her dressings and sauces. Every five minutes show all have her work to speak with the restless young creature, who, have full with hopes and fears, fluttered from rank to raise, trying to occupy herself so that her heart would not be a grite so unreasonably.

"They are coming!" she cried, at het, healing at his for the han Irolth time to the top of a little hand which gave her a further view of the river. How glody the ripples sparkled, how lightly the winds danced, to her jay as eyes. "Oh, Palles, they are coming! what shall I do?" and she had her face on the old woman's less m, as if dyler from what she yet so eagerly expected.

"Do, durlin'? oh, my chile, you got to be a weath now promote little chile to run away and him. Mass Mark berry proud of his with dat is to b. Dod't make him shamed, darlin'."

Ashamed of her! in rify Philip I the the risk was death to Alice's a native spirit. She like I had her had and here calm at once.

There, normie, I don't for startled may recent I thank I can not them, chappanners all, while it is also Her father, who had been on the look-out, took a little skift and went down to meet the party. Alice stood on the shore, as she had done upon the day of Philip's first arrival. A soft rose glowed in either cheek, which was all the outward sign of the inward tumult as she saw her bridegroom sailing near enough to recognize and salute her. She saw in the boat Philip, the minister, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond, and a young haly whom she had never met, and a strange young gentleman.

It was the proudest moment of Philip's life when that young lady turned and grasped his arm, exclaiming in a low

Toice:

"I den't wonder you refused me, cousin Philip. I did not know such beings existed except in poetry and painting."

Pallas, standing in the door, in an extra fine turban and the new dress sent for the occasion, thought her pickaninny did credit to her "troughten" up," as she saw the manner, quiet, modest, but filled with peculiar grace, with which Alice received her guests.

"Alive," said Philip, placing the fair hand of the proud strunger in hers; "this is my cousin Virginia."

"I have come to wish you joy, Alice," sail Virginia, kissing her check lightly, and smiling in a sad, cold kind of way.

Her maining attire, and the evident melancholy of her turned the affection to heart of her hostess, who returned her kiss with interest.

"If r de law's sake, Saturn, come here quick—quick! Who he det e-min' up de walk will maker and de comp'ny? Effect alo't latte Virginny Moore, growel up, who is it?"

"It's Virginity, sare 'muli !" ejaculated her husband.

In the mean time that young lady herself began to lack at at with quick, inquiring glances; she per red into the ratts-tanks there anxiously, and again toward the old servants, a large x 1 lack coming over her face as she neared the house.

Full a mil Sature, year faller's people, who had you in our trus elery day till you was cirilt year old. You do remember all Pullus, dan't you now, honey? My! my! what a lattis mir, tall tirl you is growel—de picture ob your faller Yer's More tru and tru, Misers. My the eyes is glad to see You."

"Hi! hi! Miss Virginny!" chuckled Saturn, bowing and scraping.

"Come long and let me get your lunnit off. I want to take a good look at ye, honey. Mi was Alice noter was a Moore—she was like her multer small and party and timblille; but ye's a perfect Moore, Miss Virginay. My! my! I know 'em all, root and branch. I told my ole man Massar Philip belonged to our Mooreses, but Massar Williams he had all the visitor's bonnet off by this time, talking all the time, and oblivious, in her excit I state, of the other guests.

"Yes, Miss Virginia," said the raft man, drawing his powerful figure up to its full height, "I am that broth reindaw you have been taught to ditest and be ashamed off. You would hardly have come to the welling, if you had known what poor company you were to get in."

All those of the company who kn w him look I at him is surprise, for he had dropped his his his france specificant took on the air of a superior man. Virthink how has him a moment calmly, taking, as it were, an element of the mind and heart outside of that athletic fram, and globaling through these noble though weather-best in factors.

"I do not see any thing to be ushared of," she said, with a smile, giving him her hand, trankly, in a siturly magner. "I was but a little child, you know, when your constitution with our family commenced. Doubtles I have to a failer enced by what I have heard. If my father wranged you David Wilde, it is time for you to for ive it—by up no hard thoughts a minst the deal."

Her lip tremt led over the last suitence.

"Dear Virginia! is it possible my Alice is to find in you-"

"An aunt? yes, Philip,—and you are about to many yest third cousin. It's rather carloss, instalt?"

"We'll talk it over ather support," said the heat. "Pall exour greats are here my. The river he was all in a the application."

Pallus wanted no further hint. Perfectly contact that side had the means of satisfying any and but of heart, say retired with her substrainate husband, to dish up the feat.

"Ilspect I'll spile half dese tings, Fee so thattant I'll you mind whar' I put dut papper, Saturn? I declar' I can't say wedler I put it in de gravy or in de coffee. I jes' turn 'round and put it in de satisfie' on de stove, wile I was tinkin' how cur'es tings happens. Dear! dear! I put it in de coffee, sure 'nuif, and now dat's all to be trowed away! 'Spect thus won't be fit to eat. Why don' you fly round and grin' in receife:? You is de stupi lest nigger!"

In spite of small tribulations, however, the supper was served in deep season and with due seasoning. Gay conversation prevaled; but Alice, though bright and attentive, felt un my. Her glance frequently wandered to the windows and of a deep. A certain dark figure had so often started up in unexpected places, and seemed to hover about so when least type ted, that she could not be entirely at her case. It was true that several man were on guard, and that Ban had not be a hard of far a week; but he was so sly, so subtle, she till alm stassif he might drop out of the roof or come up out of the certain at any in fant.

Phillip was warn I to be on the look-out. He hughed and said he was a match for Bon in a fair fight, and if the other

L. I mo fir arms, he could take core of hims lf.

Lengual rather took the perty, fitting a with their journey, but he is the night, David Wille, Allee, Philip, and Virginia sature, talking over the part, present, and fature.

All, s, who had never known the particulars of her mother's marriage and death, except as she had gathered hints from her all narro, now fixened with tearful eyes to brief explanations of the past.

If really in his youth, held from a medical student, poor, in a precedent tell int—a charity-student, in fact, who, one day had, at the risk of his own life, saved the lovely derriter of Mariner Mare from the attack of a rabid dog in the street. He had a tadly choled the ferocious creature to doth in his desperate crip. Grateful for the not be and inestinable saving, the father invited him to the house to receive the intil toler of his gratitude in the shape of a sum of the father invited him to the shape of a sum of the father than through his course of study. But the carry him through his course of study. But the carry him through his course of study. But the carry him through his course of study. But the most har present, make a deep impression upon Aller Macri-it was a case of leve at first sight upon both sides—they were young and foolish—the fither opposed the match with contempt and indignation. His rudiness r - i the ire of the proud student; he resolved to marry the well-n he loved, in spite of poverty. They fiel, a companied by Pullus, the attendant of the young wirl; the full r ret - 1 to Prive them; and then, when sichnes and suff rink, mit pered by the luxuries of wealth, came up a his delicate with, the young husband realized what he had determing realist her away from her home and the habits of her him. If he had first finished his studies and put him of in the way of gaining even a modest living, and she had chean to share such a lot, he would have done right in fall wing the di tat s of his heart. Now he felt that he had be nearly red. A year of strange, wild happiness, mixed with serr weard privation passed, and the wife became a m. th. r. Pullus nurs l her with tireless asciluity; her has and, I und to her sick couch, could not exert Limself as he might have dine al me; they grew desperately poor-he call not so her suffer without humbling his prile, and writing to ber father to eat life, not him, the means necessary to her emfort and read re-They were collly denied. Privation structulated at care, grief, and trouble more, r tarded her removery,---he fell into a decline, and died in his arms, who was a made of the her beloved corpse to firsula a will so me in the rail, so unhappy. Sending a litter newsorth better, in the peared with their infant child. The date in the late, we had also personaled her hashand to a party the and with him as fecter-mother to the child. They true distri-. for West-much firther in the relays than a w-and we they first a tiled where they new word, they were in but I in the wilderness.

Mr. Will be took up his period of a personal hand. Dy the time other emissions had not be sufficient at a form the river, he had not be examined from hand, and had not be up to be where it was want he has construct up to be him not be size a formal basic as increasing up a blue. Define all the terms of the had norther his spice and had not be a formal his spice and had not be a formal his spice.

because one haughty old aristocrat had allowed a fair child to perish neclected, he condemned refined society en masse. He allopted the conversation and manners, to a great degree, of the selly whom he was surrounded.

All these things explained to Philip many incongruities in the talk and habits of Mr. Wilde—the possession of books, the knowledge of man—which had hitherto challenged his curiosity.

It had been the object of the raftsman to bring up his dirighter in strict seclusion from the world he despised; he had not thought of further consequences than to keep her intocent, unseeldsh, unsuspicious, and free from guile. Chance the w Philip in their way. His frankness, pleasant temper, and singerity exerced his fashionable graces in Mr. Wible's estimation; more intimate as ociation with him did much to wear away the prejudices he had been heaping up unchalleng by first long; and when it came to the certainty that his laughter must choose between one of the rough and unchalled in the mean around her, or on a man like Philip, he could not one and from himself that Philip was his choice.

"And what do you think brought me out here at this criti al n. n. at?" askel Virginia. "I come to throw myself "In Phillip's charity—to be a me a pensioner upon his bounty. To, Mr. Wilde, up in clasing up my father's estate, there was in a lately nothing left for his only child. He lived up to all that he present, he plant, but no his poverty became known, that I would make a brilliant mat h. A fortnight are my langur to it me there would be nothing 1 th, but a small anbeing them may mether, which they can not touch. It is a sun to by sufficient to dress me plainly—it will not begin to pay ay bard. So I, undle to bar my disconfiture alone, to all a serwill, thought it less bitter to be in anew E. . t. retrargers than in the sens of my former triumph. I Catalon to be a Pallip to that me some little rural school "I might earn my brack and batter in peace, unding lythe cold. Bull ast w religion I'll make a good teacher,

Not also sign 1 however, despite her attempt at pleasantry It was easy to be a minute excise plan own living would go be twin the accomplished days be not Mortiner Moore.

"But Philip will never let you go away from us, I am sure," said Alice's soft voice, care-singly.

"Until she goes to a home of her own," added her cousin, with a mischievous smale. "I wouldn't be guilty of match-making; but I own I had a purpose in asking my friend Irving to stand as groomsman with Virginia. He was you like him, my sweet cousin?—be honest now."

"Not as well as I have liked some other man, sir ?"

- "Oh, of course, not yet; but you'll grow to it; and he has no stain upon his escutcheon—he isn't even a fleur-merchant or mill-owner."
- "You haven't told me what he is yet," will Virginia, with a slight show of interest.
 - "He's my book-keeper."

"Oh, Philip! you're jesting."

"No, indeed, I'm not. He has not a cont, saving his salary; but he's a gentleman and a scholar, and has seen letter days."

"Well, I like him, anyhow," she remarked, presently.

You could teach school, and he could keep books. You could take a suite of three rooms, and wait upon yourselves. I'll promise to furnish the rooms with dinity, dolf, and ray carpeting"

"You are generous, Philip."

"And to send you an occasional barrel of figure and bad of refuse kindling-wood."

" My prospects brighten."

"Don't team the girl," said the rajisman, "she'll do butter 'n you think for you. Since my own chick has described me for another nest, I don't know but I shall adopt Virginia myself."

"I wish you would," and the great black eyes were turned to him with a mournful, I nely bak. "Hveryte by classis so happy and blocked, they do not not have But I sould be to wait upon you, and cherryet, sir."

It was a great change which midirture was working in the spirit of the providend and it is jith. Philip, who know her so well, reparted her providenced with surprise.

"Well, well, without juition, I intend to shipt this orginal girl. She's the sister of my own deal was, and six said share equally with my little Alice in all that the rough old aftsman has."

"Which won't be much, futher," said Alice, with a smile, glancing around up in their humble forest home.

"Den't be too sure of that, little one. I haven't felled pine lys and sawed lumber for fifteen years to no account. Dil you think your two dresses a year, your slippers, and straw-hats had eaten up all the money-bags I brought home with me upon my trips. Here's a check for five thousand dallars, press, to furnish that new house with; and when Philip gets time to 'tend to it, the each is ready to put up a steam saw-mill night about here, somewhere—the income to be yours. It'll bring you in a nice little bit of pocket-money. And if Virginia concludes to accept that pale-faced book-keeper, than's an equal sum laid aside for her—and home and many as much as she wants in the mean time. It shan't be said the old raftsman's pretty daughters had no wedding portion."

Virginia took his rough hand in her two white ones, and a tear mingled with the kies which she pressed upon it.

CHAPTER XII:

THE TORNADO.

Winn Alice came out of her room dress life the mirriage ceremony she looked quaintly lovely. Old Pall is solded as she looked at her, and her father wiped the dimness a min and again from his eyes; for it was as if the file young brille of long ago had come to life.

Philip had made it an expecial request that she should draw in a costume similar to that she were when he first had her; and her father had told her to provide no we like the as he wished her to wear one of his own change. She had been attired in the brital robe and vall, the high had held he slippers, the long white sloves which had him so many provide the mysterious trunk. Philip's six, a had not of parts, shone above a brown of less pure-set in the gold not have of her hair.

Virginia laid a de her mourning for that day, any arise in a fleecy muslin robe, as bride-maid, and notes the length dy on account of the simplicity of her dress. Her for had gained an expression of gentleness which added very mand to her superb attractions, and which was not unnoticed by her companion in the ceremonies.

The worls had been sail will hence the best in head and wife. A more remarkly wellier solims has considered than was this, in which wealth and of the were so intimately combined with the rule simplicity of fraction life. To see those beautiful and richly-droped has efficient in and out the modest house burill in the shadows of the western woods; the luxurious viands of the cools problems of the western upon the plainest of delf, to have the delication of the plainest of delf, to have the delication of the sumble of that September day. The spirit of the second that and copy I by all, or not he was rable of the second that the sumble of that September day.

volces and gay laughter blent with the murmur of the riverfand, a limiting eyes fellowed every motion of the bride. The bride! where was the bride?

She had been ster ling on the lawn, just in front of the low r with Mrs. Raymond, who was saying-

"'Il many is the brille the sun shines on,"" just the previous moment; Mrs. Raymend had run down to

Mr. Wille, ever apprehensive, ever vigilant, hall just missed bur, and was turning to inquire of the bride groom, when a shrick, will, shorp, againing, paralyzed for an intent every faculty of the listeners.

"Grad Gal, it is that malman!" burt from the father's lips.

Philip and he spring out-of-doors together, just in time to so her herm into the ferest, thing like an infint over the should ref her ablacter, who was making great leaps along the path with the spect and strength of a panther. The two men appoints I as grands were running after him. Mr. Wilde spring in his rid—the brid-groom waited for nothing.

"I) hit short?" he shouted to the men; "you will kill the girl !"

Philip re. le l'and distance l'ille men; the raft man, strong and tall, and a customed to the woods, pass I him even, madly as he exerted himself.

"If I may due to fire," he breathed, between his clanched in the "If he would give no just one second's thir and square wine-the mar child, she is his shild?"

The er three that the two ferences pursuers came in "Pull pil felt ?" In so h pirelog tone of entreaty.

"On Holy I say he, Philip?" cooke was so hear, he hard the fire of a decire ty-left the fire as creature who was a life of a decire to the fire as who pend from I, legistrate with a left of the left

. "Philip-fatner-Philip I"

How lint, how far away. At length they heard her no more; they had lost the clue—they knew not which way to pursue. The forest grew willer and donor; it was dim at mil-day under those tall, thick-stanling pines; and now the afternoon was wearing toward sunset.

"Philip," sail the raftsman in a harse voice, "we have separate—each man of the party must take a dall rent track. Here is my rifle; I will get another from the men. Use it if you dare—use it, at all risks, if that devil a clast o harm her.

His strength must give up some time."

"Don't despair, father," said the new-made hubball, hat his own heart was cold in his bosom, and he filt so design to that he could have turned the ritle up n himself.

Not knowing but that he was going further from instant of nearer to the objects of his search, with every step, he had to pause frequently to listen for some some to golde him. Wandering on in this wild, unsatisfactory way, his brain growing on fire with horror, sallenly he heard a sharp voice chanting—

When the factor of data is to it."

The next moment be came face to fare with B a Peralisbut no Alice was in his arms now, a r was she anywhere in sight.

"Figure 1 devil t what have you done with my m. "?"

His eyes shone like coals out of a fact as white a coals he coals out of a fact as white a coals have made have made any substituted by but the write his or him object the him vacantly in the fact with a recent limit of the plant.

ter value I a la liberte.

"Where is show mesons in a day of "

The hard of Philip chick I the hand is the at, a fundative transition of an encoded as superhouse in the transition of the other had been, he should him the in- he repeated the question. The maintain will be made had a major but as soon as the hall was related, he sill from and r h, and sprang away.

" They made her a grave too column damp'" ne chantel, durting from tree to tree, as Philip, hopeless of making him tell what he had done with Alice, tried to short him down.

mentary chance, he fired, but without effect; Ben elimbed a tree, with ing from branch to branch like a squirrel, until he reach the top, and like a squirrel chattering nonsense to hims lit. "If I had another shot I would put an end to his missible existence," muttered Philip, turning away to trace, if possible, the track of the man, and find where he had dropped Alice.

Son he came out upon a small, open, elevated space-the river was my none side, the weeds all around. Something strat go was in the air-nature seemed to be listening-not a treath rippled the water or made a leaf quiver-he felt hot and sill at l. Despite of all his mental misery, he, too, prise lend list ned like the elements-his car caught a faraway marnar. The day had been very warm for that season of the year; it grow, now, opposite A low bank of dark clais by alog the south and west, hanging over the prairie on the opposite side of the stream-it was such a bank of chals as would some to threaten rain bed re midnight; but et a while he was i, a great black column wheeled up from the restrict I whirl do ning the sky with frielitid regility. Tir dituit murmur grew to a rear, and the rear depend - I har I mail it was like the striswell of a thou and " Stime I by the turnelt, facilitied by the solding trrible specials, he fellowed with his more the euror The truck the truck to which the firm of succession does no the party of rout markets. The air was the k -- I to the every thing - he will train - he is in The state of the s jord jury has the think the think the frest, is the training to rest was placed through with the soupfirst, cr. Markett Fill Fill to the pipe Street and had been been all creeks to the courth.

A short time he crouched where he was, held down in fact, pressed, flattened, hurt by the trampling winds; but nothing else struck him, and presently he strucked to his first.

What a special met him, as he locked toward the first from which he had so lat ly emirred! A vest and corrwhelming rain, in the midst of which it so med impossible that any life, animal or veretable, should have example. A desolation, such as poets have pictured as clingling to the "last man," came over the soul of Philip Mark. Where were his friends? where that gay party he had invited from their distant homes to meet this fate? where was Alice, his wife of an hour? His manhood yielded to the blow; he cowered and sobbed like a child.

The darkness passed over for a trief time, only to ome again with the setting sun, which had sent sent built gleans of light, like torches to fire the ruin, through the sterm, to fire sinking from sight. A drenching ruin till in toronts, the wind blow chilly and rough.

"I will search for her—I will find her, and the health her mangled remains," murmured Philip, arising and turning toward the forest.

The incess and flashes of lightning were his only, hands as he structed through the intricate mazes of falls a trees. It was a tree which despair, not hope, prompted, to the turn of rain and wind and darkness, over and under said the garesplintered trunks and tracked follow, be him, by the lightening's evanescent glare, for some glings of the white build robe of his beloved. The hours probable in the light shift days and weeks to his suffering instainable, and sufficient mass not morning. As if not content with the destruction of the prostruct will lake to hard the hard their course of the prostruct will lake up some a larry tree which me is a lightning would lake up some a larry tree which me is a lightning would lake up some a larry tree which me is a first in its henry; hall out the falls in the rain of the rain of the rain.

The lawing what manifeld his his is a little of a first through the storm. He filt mere and manifeld his manifeld his later that and a little of a first through the resolved to help his later that a later that the storm is a sort through the resolved to help his later that an instant a tree, to prevent himself the misery of going mad and yet living on in those dismul solitudes, till hunger conquered what grief refused to vanquish. Then the lightning would glimmer over a me white object, perchance the bark freshly scaled from a me shuttered trunk, and he would hurry toward it, calling —"Ali w?" as once she had called, "Philip," through a less wretched night.

It somed to him that if no other morning becam to come if releas, the morning of eternity must open its gates upon the world; the strength of the tempest was spent; only fitful so it is of wind swept past; here and there a star looked in an harriedly through the drifting clouds; the selema roll of the thunder resounded afar, like the drums of an enemy beating a retreat.

Exhausted, he sank at the foot of one of those Indian mounds common in western forests. A gleam of the vanishing lightning flickered over the scene. Hardly had it fieled into during a before a voice close to his side whispered his name; a warm hand felt through the night, touching his; a form glowing with his, soft, and tender, albeit its garments were cell and drenched, sank into his outstretched arms.

"Yes, Philip, it is I-sife, unhurt. And you-are you uninjured?"

He could not answer; his throat was choked with the swettet tears which ever welled from a man's heart; he could only press her close, close, in the silence of speechless delight.

In that hour of reuni in they knew not if they had a friend left; but the thought only drew them more near in heart than ever they had or could have been before. Weary and stormball in, but fill I with a solumn joy, they clasped each other class and sink upon the wet sol, to sleep the sleep of exhaustin, until the morning should dawn upon them to light their tearch for their friends.

CHAPTER XIV.

GATHERING TOGETHER. -

The first ray of morning startled the young couple from their sweet but troubled sleep.

"You shiver!" exclaimed Phillip, holding at the damp, disordered attire of his wife; "I ought not to have allowed you to full asleep in those wet garments."

"It is but a momentary chill, dear Phillip. Oh, let us go and find my father. Certainty will be more endurable than this dreadful suspense."

They arose, pursuing their search through the gray have which brightened soon into as glorious a Septimiar day as ever shone. There was no use in trying to convict Mather Nature of crime and bloodshed; she appeared totally unonscious of the waste and ruin she had spread over the land the previous day. Through the wrecked wild mass they strongled forward, silent, sad, looking in every direction to true soft their friends, and making their way, as correctly as they could discern it, with the river for a guilb, toward the home which they expected to find overwhelmed and south it is put the storm.

It was four or five hours before they came in strict of the cubin, so tollsome was their course; many thus Ali had been obliced to ret, for hunter and fatire man because overpowering and now Phillip had to support her almost out tirely, as she clung to his arm.

as I live!"

The sterm, sweeting on, had just took I with he seems; edges the house, which was unreds! and the chirary III and down, and otherwise shak nearly injury, the first terms of the two came in sight of it, it, ye recent of Pallus, sitting on the front step in an attribute for any terms.

lesson lency, her all ron thrown over her face, motionless and silent. She did not hear them nor see them until they stood by her side.

"Pallas! what is the news? where is my father?"

The old woman flung her apron down with a mingled taugh and groan.

"Oh, my chile, my darlin', my pickaninny, is dat you, an' no mi take?" Springing up, she caught her young mistress to har beam, and holding her there, laughed and sobbed over her to there. "Sence I seen you safe agin, and young masser, too, but of you safe and soun', as I nober 'spected to be half on dis yearth a in, but me go now, 'long wid my ole man—() Larli let thy serbeat depart in peace!"

" My flather-have you heard from him since the storm?"

"No, darlin', not from one single soul, all dis awful night. De la lies day were will me till de mornin' broke, den day set out, cryin' and weepin' and wringin' dere han's, to look for all you who was in de wood. Oh, dis has been a turrible season for a wellin'. I had a sinse all de time suthin' was goin' to happen. My poor ole man!"

"What's become of him?" asked Philip.

"Dr Ler labove alone knows where he be now—oh! oh! He was tak right up to glery, will his wellin' garment on. I see him willin' off, but I couldn't help him. Laws! if missis isn't a gain' to faint deal over."

"Give her to me, and get something for her to cat and druck, if you can find it, Pallas. She's wern out."

"I've k p' up a thre in de kitchen, which is low, an' not used hert. I'd special be I down dur and lay her down on de the rill I make some right strong tea. Lord be merelfal to me a singer! It's times as make cle Pallas's heart ache. Come 'I or will her, masser—I'll tro a mattress on de floor. Der, by her down, I'll hab de tea directly. Soch sichts as I so ye bring is 'ne'll to une the anylorly as sots der heart on de tings ob alls well. When I heard my chile scream, I to the knife went right true me —I could n' run, nor do to had a knife went right true me—I could n' run, nor do to had it is do well, will elemberly out ob sicht, when I are to do well, will elemberly out ob sicht, when I are to see make might. First I to obt it was do relieve broking loos., I is held rem,', but that was jes' as peaceable as a lamb. Here, honey, set up, and drink yer tea. Den I tought de woods on fire, as dey was onet, when der made sech a rour, but dey wan't. Den I looked up to see if de sky was fallin', which was de fast I saw ob de wind. It war a whirlin' and a roarin' like ober so many touser. I, han ired millwheels. It look for all de worl' like a big finnel will water pourin' tru. I was so scart, I run back to de lous, holi rin' ter my ole man, who was settin' on de fince, lakin' this r way. But he didn' hear me. It went right past, he blin' me up agin de wall as ef I war nailed. I son de air all full ob chery ting, chickens and pigs and boards and trees, and it tok my ole man right up off dat fence an' carried him up to de nex' worl'. I see him, wil my own eyes, rilla' of in de chariot ob de wind, way over de woods, way off, off, off, off sight. Oh, missus, when I see him gain's a, I m s' wish I was long. I know Saturn was a foolish nizzer, and a mighty shoryheaded. He was n' no use to me much-he was a grant er a; but der neber was a better-hearted husband. He min' me bliea chile. And he was so fond of presaried plums, and strike hand to help 'bout de kitchen-'pears to me I hain't no hart. But laws, what bus ness I to speak my treally, and was a 'r to know where your own faller is. If me r duit o the back, I'll jes' lay down an' die. Poer che niger to ne re use. Dar's Saturn tuk away in de chou is will his ber nim at on, as de Bille commands; and neber one mouth de welling feas' which is standin' on de table, and de min builting i wo upon it—oh! hi! hi!"

"Poor Pallus, I'm sorry for you. But, Philip, I must gro-

I feel stronger now."

"No, no, my own darling Alles, you are not fit for further exertion. Remain here in the hands of your note. Pulles, I heave my wife to your care. She is in a five now. One of her chathing and give her hot drinks. I nost be T. Hop up heart, dearest, till I get back."

He had hastily disposed of a cup of termine for models food, kissed his brill, and was harrying in a termine to go again into the weeks for title a warm in the intermediate of the deer. It is to be except poor oil Seturn, where example in a group. Various the refisman himself, were examined up in a group. Various and Mrs. Raymond had encountered them in their search for the charing, and had led them out of the woods. Mr. Ray-Bett and the clerryman had been together overtaken by the tanget; but it was not so severe where they were, as in that part of the forest reached by Mr. Wilde and Philip. Tres Led fellen before and around them, but they had es-Caje! unharmed. Night coming on, and the rain an! clanged therefor of the scene bewildering them, they had not ton able to make their way out of the woods; and of course had suffered from anxiety, in common with their fring is. Their astonishment and joy at beholding the bride on! green in safety were only held in check by the uncer-Linty which hung about the fate of their host. Not one would enter the house, until that fate was known; taking from Pallas the cakes and cold meat she brought them, they have in I away—all but Alice, who was really too ill from exin and surpense, to make any further effort.

"Yes, you rest yourself, and try to be composed, honey. He your dar, good father is really taken away, you hab much to themkild fir, that yer not left unpertected in this i. Il werl'. You've a husban! dat loves you as his heart's 1 |- ... | yer tittler himself will smile in de heaben above, touk how glad her is, all was made right, and you with some . train for got, 'fire he was tooken away. Dar', dar', den't .rt p ur. It a soldin'so. I erid all night, and now desc in the property is the mark tears left. When I tengtht I was in all me-no mest, no missus, no husban l-my heart I a let a cell stere. I fel better now. Ef masser war to I could almost rejoice, spite of my 'thetions. I mus' - i. r mil and get sathin' ready for all dese tirel, hungry ingle to est, and a t dem led ables dried where de rain beat . In this et, just as it was, when I was out here poin' fer to put the character than the street. My part ole mail His grant, sare, for I saw him to. Saturn Il mober cut to to a manifest in the lit lit New, now, pickuthe with the tell with the administration. You to the percent of the selection of the percent father-

All rough to the der. Philip was leading her father in a large and here town in a help's manner.

" (th, father, are you hurt?"

"Nothing to speak of-not worth mentioning.—a little bruised, and my left arm broken. Positively, I den't feel a bit of pain, since I see you unharmed, my darling."

"But you'll come to a realizing some of it, by the time we have set it, after its going so long unattended it," said Philip.

"If I groan, punish me for it," replied the sturdy reference.
The broken limb was soon set and splintered, and the friends had time to look in each others' faces, and realist they were all together and safe.

"You have not teld us how you comp. I so remarkably," said they to Alice.

"Not another word at presen," sail Palles, quality the door to the dining-room. "De wellin'-has has had han eaten—such as it is, ye mus' stan' in need of it. "Tain't what it would have been yesterday,—but I've did my had unlik de circumstances."

"Take my place, Philip; I'll lie lere on this lengt, and when pass is through, she can feel me."

"If misses 'll cut up his fool, I'll wait on har"

As the declining energies of the party were a writed by the dinner, their spirits rose to a nothing of the hibrity of the previous day;—if it had not been for soming appropriate with the sorrow of the old servent, mirth would have provided in particular particles. An experience in its lirth, tell them their had two had expected as easy as he affected to be; but he would be to experienced in with fortitude.

In the enter of the table stable brible calls, we provide the telephot Palla whill, we will be at a formal and the calls. It was this to be it up a, which and the call to be an entered to the eye.

"Der" was do while a of they can be desired in the case,"

"Then I should call it a very our persist and error rates for a article," remarked Mr. Hayman', who I do be at a sertion.

"Tain't any too him for de bride it was made for a tain

"There's a ring la it," said Alice, as she per read the dary of the occasion by cutting the culte, "When he it?"

Everybody took their piece with curiosity, and finally Mr. Irving held up the golden circlet, giving, at the same time, a glarge towards Virginia, too expressive to be misunderstood.

"You'll be married next, Mr. Irving, and we hold curselves all invit-1 to the welding," said Mrs. Raymond.

"I hope I may be," replied that gentleman, with a second time toward the bride-maid; but she was looking to her the and did not seem to hear him.

Vir inia had pursued the art of flirtation too long to abandon it at once.

As they ling red over the closing cup of coffee, Alice related the circumstance which had probably saved her life. It is med she could not endure to dwell upon the terror of her flight in that wild maniac's arms, paring it over as briefly as possible.

"When I had given up all hope of rescue, and felt as if actually dying, from the terror of my situation, my abductor so I haly parsed, before what seemed to be a small ledge of rack, such as frequently juts out of the ground in these woods, equally near the river. Pushing aside a vine which trailed this kly before it, he thrust me into the mouth of a cave, but instead of I lowing me in, as I expected, he drew the vine carefully ever it again, and sprung away, singing.—

"'I'll hills the mail in a cypress tree, When the factor of death is near."

The followed expuisite relief which came to me in that measure was quickly supers to the theoretic of his speedy return. While I stood there, trendling, waiting for him to a too a citation and he ming, in the loops that I might on operated class king. I have the approaching temperated class king the architectual class when it rest full protects. As we must the first that it is a loop to a first out, thinking nothing but of the detection of my triangle. Too districted to 1 any personal to 1 west red through the storm, I have not how many lears but it, by the more toleance, a till he of lightning revealed bushes, at four first away from me."

"The tiret thing you did, I supplie, was to give him a car-

"And now, dear father, I think the roof blow off, and the house blow to pieces almost, and your arm was briken, on purpose to convince you of the nees ity of spending your winter with us. It would be foold he to try to make this confortable again, this fall. Your man can get a reaf on, to protect it from the weather, and we'll have it to its fat."

"Since he's disable I am I can't de i n I him. If, we'll tale him captive," said Philip.

"Have it as you like, children, I expect to be I derived by apron-strings after this. Next spring, I'll take Virginia, and come back here, and will put up the hand the stands in that ever graced this river-side—it shall be large on tight to accommodate the whole family, present and prespective. He module color up, little girl,—I was only thinking of Virginia's future spouse—ch, Virginia,—what's Mr. Irving Unshing for five

"I don't know-men should never bluck-it's a we kn se."

"I wish I could be as unmoved as you," he while red in her car, for he sat by her side. "It would be more because to me than it is to you. Women were much to him to him to tremble."

"Were they, Mr. Irving, then pould better have the things to them, and not be introduced upon their spices."

"Perhaps I shall obey you, Mis M. r.," he said re . r. ing all his coolness.

She filt that he was a man not to be trial I with. So live ten I full of a nellolity as he might be, he was not the most of let a woman put her foot on his nell. He middle to be the foot, but he would not submit to be transplaint in the He would love, truly and deeply, but he must be reject and loved in return. His was just the spiral fit of the reins and curb the two healers or and whall is a confidence of Virginia—under the control of a middle and a with the reins, her fields might change into virious.

Philip was secretly recarding than, delighted to a low son he recovered his allepton in a delight was injured to his companion fold it. He saw that she first look and shally, giving up, or real horself to be first look.

able.

"They will be well matched. I to be new a but the for my naughty coatin. I had not be to the a Time!

him to act as groomsman. She'll be a good while giving up, though."

That Virginia would not yield to this new mastership very son was evident. When they had left the dining-room, and were sanding on the portico, Mr. Irving desired to place the which had fallen to him upon her finger—but she relief it with considerable hauteur.

"I only desired you to wear it for safe-keeping. It's a ly's ring, and I don't know what to do with it. Mrs. Raymond, will you accept it?"

He placed it on the finger of the married lady with as placent an air, as if it had been accepted where he first offered it.

"I had not ought to wear it; give it to some fair and han"

"There is but one, and she will not have it. If there were there, I should certainly offer it. So you see it is chance only that has left it to you."

Well, I'm not very much flattered Mr. Irving-but the ring is just as pretty, and I ought to be thankful to chance."

So the ring was lost to Virginia, without the satisfaction or having annoyed the one who offered it.

CHAPTER XV.

BEN AND ALICE.

"Now that the wedding-feast is dispended, I must remind you all that there is yet work to be done. I have not heard from the mill; and poor of I Saturn must be search of reasonable as that unfortunate young man who has made us so much trouble. It frets me to think I can do nothing. Philip, and the service in place of my broken arm."

or three men came from the mill, to in pire after the family, and to relate to the captain the story of the vest dimension his property had sustained.

"Oh, what is de riches of dis werl", not er, "said Pality as she, too, paused from her work to hear their interesting narrative of wreck and chaos upon every side, with accounts which had reached them from people farther down, where the tornado had made a yet more terrible visitation. "What is do riches of dis worl", when a bref of de Almichty can swrep 'em away like as dey were dust and trach. My cle more he turn you 'way, 'eause yer had no riches, and your chile-wife, she die of grief; and you come can here and work and work in de willerness half as long as de chillen of I male and you much to gib her had and when she got one—and he at the come, and all yer pine trees is half by and you millen in the broken at de fount in, and your riches pass 'way in it will plenich."

"It's time for me to be in thinking of the things I support. Paller But, as to my health which winter, we my this fall a timber—and as for the ellimit, I think at his order pleas to have a the fallliment of my plane for the past securional in its place. I've worked for Alice, and now I need work for Virginia."

"Let us at least," said the clergyman, who was standing by, "be reminded of our duty by this humble colored woman

-let us offer up thanks for our wonderful preservation."

All knelt, except the disabled raftsman, while the minister offered up a heartfelt thanksgiving, when the party set forth into the tangled forest again. Alice, who had been overcome more by anxiety than by fatigue, was so recruited, that she insisted upon going with Philip. Her familiarity with the woods she thought would enable her to trace the way to the spot where Ben would doubtless be found a corpse; the fact that he was high up in the branches of a tall tree when the tempest struck the spot, making it almost certain that he was destroyed. Two or three foresters, Raymond, and Philip, followed their guide, as she wound through and climbed over matted branches and fallen trunks, pausing occasionally for some trace of the familiar aspect of yesterday. In many places the forest looked actually as if a band of giant reapers had passed that way and mowed down the trees in mighty swaths. Again, when the tornado had taken a more whirling moment, the great trunks would be twisted and snapped off in long splinters, ten or twelve feet from the ground. An overwhelming sense of the terrific power of their unwelcome visitor oppressed them, as they beheld its ravages in the broad daylight.

"And yet, dear Philip, it may have been sent by Providence to save me from a fearful fate-or at least, it did save me, and I am grateful—oh, so grateful," whispered the young wife, as Philip assisted her over a huge tree which lay, torn up by the roots, across their path.

"It must have been somewhere about here," she said, presently.

"I am sure I have no idea of the locality," answered

Philip.

"Yes! there is the ledge of rock, and the cavern into which he thrust me. Poor Ben! I forgive him all. I hardly dare go on-I am afraid I shall see some dreadful sight;" and she shuddered.

"Perhaps you had better rest yourself, while we search this vicinity closely."

"Oh, no! I am too nervous to be left alone. I will keep by your side," and she clung to his arm, growing paler every moment, and scarcely daring to look before her.

"Hush!" exclaimed one of the foresters, half-an-hour later, turning back toward the young couple who were some ditance behind. "Don't let her come near. We've found him; he's dead as a hammer."

Alice sat down upon a fallen tree-trunk, faint and trembling. "Stay here, dearest, a few moments. I will come back to you," and Philip went forward with the men to where, amid the ruins of the forest,—Ben lay, a crushed and senseless human thing. He was dreadfully mutilated, and to every appearance dead. They dragged him out from under the heavy branches, and as they did so, a low groan startled them. One of the men sank down and took the head upon his knee.

"Where's Alice ?"

Ben unclosed his eyes, as he asked the question, moving them about from one face to another with a searching glance.

"I'm dying-bring her quick. Oh, do bring her, won't you ?"

The gasping voice was loud and thrilling in the eagerness of its entreaty. Philip turned away and went for his wife.

"Do you think you can bear the sight?"

"If he wishes to see me, I shall not deny a dying man. He took many a step for me, in his better days—poor boy."

Ben seemed to distinguish her footsteps as she drew near.

He could not stir, but his eyes turned in that direction.

"Are you cryin' for me?" he asked, as she stood by his side, the tears flowing down her cheeks like rain. "It's enough to make a man die happy to see you cryin' for him, Alice."

"O Ben! I wish I could help you," she sobbed.

"I'm past earthly help, and I'm glad of it. It's the best thing could happen to a used-up fellow like me. I don't blame you for it, Alice, but I'm to blame for things I've done, and I want to ask you to forgive me. My head's been on fire for weeks—I've been in a strange state—I can't recall what I've did or said. Then I got hur, I don't know how—and when I could think again, that burning pain in my head was gone. I knew I was dyin', and I wanted to see you. I wanted to carry the pictur' of your face to the next world. I enouldn't be ashamed to show it to the angels—if they'll have any thing to do with a poor, ignorant fellow like me, as Pallas said they would. You're married, ain't you?"

"She is my wife," said Philip, gently, taking her hand.

"It made me crazy to think of it once; but it's over now. Alice, you've my blessin' and my wishes that you may be happy all your life. Forgive me the trouble I've made ye, and may you and him be happy long after the grass grows over poor Ben Perkins."

Alice sobbed aloud, and the rough men standing around were grave and silent. The last sentence had been spoken in a whisper, and it was evident that life was ebbing away rapidly. He closed his eyes, and the sweat gathered on the pallid face, but a short time since, rich with the olive and crimson of health and youth.

"I shan't be twenty-two till next month," he whispered, with shut eyes. "Put it on my tombstone, and let 'em put on it-

"'Oh, his heart, his heart was broken For the love of Alice Wilde."

They stood looking at him.

"Alice—good-by. Alice—where are you? Alice!"

"Here, Ben-here I am;" but she spoke to a corpsc.

He died with the name of the woman he had loved with all the power of his passionate nature trembling upon his last breath.

The next day they buried him in a lovely spot on the bank of the river; and, spite of all his errors and crimes, he was not unwept and not unmourned. Once he had been gay and frank, kind and honest, handsome and merry—and the memory of his good qualities swept away the judgment passed upon his later actions.

Poor Saturn's remains were not discovered; and Pallas, with the superstition of her class, was inclined to believe that he had been translated bodily; in the chariot of the wind, to that better world of which they had spoken so much together. It was a pleasant belief, and afforded her great consolation.

"He allers was so fond of dressin' and good clo'es; and be'd been taken up in his new suit as if a-purpose to please him Ef he'd only a partaken of de weddin'-feas', he couldn't hab been better prepared 'an he was. Hi! hi!"

It was a picturesque-looking party which sailed away from Wilde's mill one brilliant day in September.

"One doesn't see such a bridal-party every day, or take such a bridal tour," remarked Virginia to the groomsman by her side. "It's better than six fashionable weddings, with the usual routine. I used to have a contempt for the romantic—but I'm begining to like it."

Yes, oven the aristocratic Virginia, the beautiful metropolitan, began to be infatuated with the romance of the forest.

We may yet hear of more remarkable changes than her change of opinion. We may yet see a villa, charming as those which grace our lordly Hudson, rising amid the elms and beeches on the banks of that fairer Western river—for love, beauty, taste, and money can accomplish wonders more surprising than making the wilderness blossom like a rose—and "out West" Aladdin's lamp is no myth.

But, for the present, we will leave this picturesque party sailing down this broad, silver river in the purple and gold of an autumn day—leave it to its joyous light, and leave that one new-made grave to its silence and shadow.

THE RESERVE THE PARTY OF THE PA

- The minima less and the line to the line to the line to and if the characteristic star server and all the server

SHIPPED ROOM OF THE PARTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PARTY.

being the form the property of the last on the section of the North and the state of the stat